[Cries of hear, hear, and "we will get them."] What are those Ontario rights? Why, the boundary awa: I which they are making so much fuss over could have been settled by Mr. Mowat long 1go. He thought it would be a good election card in the election of '82, and carry Ontario for Mr. Blake by creating a jeal asy. The cry can be "Ontario is being robbed." [Cries of "so we are."] After a few more remarks, repudiating charges a few more remarks, repudiating charges against, them Mr. Robertson resumed his

J. Alph. Livingston followed with a J. Aiph. Livingston followed with a stirring speech. He spoke of the temperance colonization scheme being a success, He wanted every man to have his just rights. He objected to past veto laws. George T. Blackstock was next introduced. It happened that the greater magnates had not arrived yet and he had to speak. The present campaign here the speak. The present campaign bore the same stamp as the grits had borne before, namely: they could not tell their position with the country. Such men as Patterson and others were superior to Blake in some things, and it would show that a commercial education was better than a legal education to rule a government. He thought Mr. education was better than a legal education to rule a government. He thought Mr. McMurrich was in bad free trade company and they should reject him. When they got hold of a reformer who can the state of the state at policy was maintained in its integrity. [Hear, hear.] The grits had learned that there was but one voice in this country on the N. P., and that is: "It is bringing the country into prosperity:" [Cheers.] To every patriot and every man who had the every patriot and every man who had the interests of the government at heart it meant that they were to look out for the future of the country and see that it should not come before the world as an insignificant country but a great country. With reference to the streams bill, it meant the protection of our property. What was the meaning of the word "civilization?" It meant "living together," and that meant the mutual protection of property. What compensation is it to Mr. McLaren that he should pay a toll from time to [Laughter.] About the boundary award. Ten years ago this question would have been settled if Sir John Macdonald's proposal to Mr. Mowat had been carried out. This was an intelligent decision of the late chief justice of Quebec that the boundary should run near Thunder Bay. This would remain until reversed by a higher authority. What court is to say that decision is wrong? It follows that it is not a question for a "little man" like Mr. Mowat to determine [Laughter.] It is not a question for a great man like Sir John Macdonald to settle, but it should be by the privy council or the imperial government. [A o say that perhaps it was. He would ask his opponents to point out one teasonable objection against this redistribution bill. Which was the greater Chinese labor? He would meet that question. [Hear, hear.] They had Chinese in

.he country.
SIR JOHN HAS ADMITTED CHINESE into this country. Is there not a reason why that should be so? In 1876 had they asked for men for the work on the Canada P. R. they would have had a sea of faces turn up and say "here we are." Laboring men are not idle now. They can find labor now and profitable labor. [Cheers.] He they are the several schools and had accepted the tender of S. B. Windrum. The committee asked for men for the work on the Canada when they knew of the impossibility of getting write labor. He was proud of Mr. Blake. He had been in the American courts and the courts of his mother country. He had never in these courts seen Mr. Blake's peer. [Cheers.] He was prouder though of Sir John Macdonald. | Cheers renewed | He believed this great man at the head of the government to-day had a genius to control a government not second to Richelieu or Beaconsfield. The charge could not be laid upon him that he had benefitted himself by public service. Mr. Bickle of South Ontario said Sir

Yes, there is prosperity. Are they going to change a government which has put the country in this state of prosperity? [Cries of "No, no."] Now something local regarding the harbor question: During the last forty years no government has interested itself in the protection of the Toronto harbor. A short time ago he persuaded of the first time this own congregation but with all estimates to get information regarding the harbor. He (the speaker) norminated Captain Eads, and the minister add Captain Eads, and the minister appointed him to that work. The workingmen's national amphitheatre was about half full last night. J. Ick Evans opened the meeting by reading the usual rules—"there must be order when the bell rings, etc." Two bands were in attendance and a number of prominent gentlemen occupied seats on the platform.

H. E. Robertson was the first speaker. As a citizen of Toronto for a life-time he had a right to come forward and discuss the questions which were agitating the public mind at the present time. The principal question to decide was whether they wanted Sir John Macdonald or Mr. Blake—the former would be salvation and the considered everything as carefully.

WORKED VIGOROUSLY WITH HIM in reference to the matter. The result has been that if the improvements cost $750,-000, as it is thought they would, the government were prepared to give $600,000 for that purpose. [Cheers.] He had the honor of introducing a bill, which he believed to be a most important one, regarding the equitable distribution of the estates of insolvent debtors by which all creditors must get an equal proportion. The matter would be thoroughly discussed before the board of trade shortly. He had a letter from the members of the trades' and labor council asking that a four months' reserve be put in for workingmen's wages. He had that clause in the act before he received the letter from the trades' council. Regarding the factory act, in a report of a meeting of the trades' council in The World, it was said that "Mr. Beaty did nothing for the workingmen." He would assure them that he had nothing to do with the factory act.
