The state of the s the country's prosperity under Conservative rule, and the depression existing when Mr. rule, and the depression existing when Mr.
Mackenzie was in power. To entrust the Reform party again with the management of the country was toforego happiness, prosperity and national advancement, for certain misery
and national advancement, for certain misery and national ruin. Mr. Alexander McRoberts gave a lengthy exposition of the benefits of the National Policy. He pointed out that the interest on the public debt was 3 cents less per capita than it was under Reform rule, and contended that Mr. Blake's estimate of what the N.P. had cost was grossly exaggerated. He gave it as his opinion that the sum would not exceed 50 cen's per capita. Col. Fred Denison, the Conservative candidate, spoke on the various issues involved in the contest, and asked for support on his record as a citizen and follower of Sir John Macdonald. Dr. Strangways closed the meeting with a presentation of Col.
Denison's claims for election. A resolution was adopted pledging the meeting to support that gentleman.

No N.P. Meeting at St. Paul's Hall. night. At 8.30 about 150 people were in the hall. Chief Engineer Nicholls paced the corridor. Chairman John F. Ellis sat on the platform. No speakers were on hand, so Mr. Ellis announced that no meeting would be held. The audience left disgusted.
