OUT WITH THE TIDE. Chill and murk the twilight falls, As the tide streams out to the bay, ome close to my side, oh, faithful one! And kiss me again, I pray; or my life is ebbing along with the tid Ebbing and passing away.

ling wide the lattice-the sunset one, That looks on the open sea : ove to hear the plaintive waves, Which ever seem calling to me; Now take our babe from his cradle soft, And place him upon your knee.

How lovely he looks, with the dainty flush, Like a sea-shell's tint on his cheek! Our lives have been happy, have they not?
Though poor, we were gentle and meek.
Nay, do not cry! I grieve to see Those tears on a manly cheek.

Place him back in his little crib; Though never again he may see the light of love in these fading eyes; He will not be far from me; I shall nightly guard his gentle sleep, And keep him pure and free.

Now raise me up on your massive arm,
That has toiled for us both so long.
Kiss me again! and let me watch
The dark waves sweep along,
And hear the voice of the night wind come
With its sad and dirge-like song.

A SCOTCH LOVE SONG. They told me thou wert false, Jamie And did na care for me;
I heeded not their voice, Jamie,
I thought it could not be,
So loving were thy words, Jamie, So winsome was thy smile; I did na think that it, Jamie, Could veil one thought of guile.

Dost thou recall the hawthorn glade Where we sat side by side When, on a summer's night, Jamie, Thou sued me for thy bride? My heart was very full, Jamie, As in the pale moonshine,

I promised to be thine, Jamie, To be forever thine. l'ogether there we knelt, Jamie, The bent and reverent knee. And prayed our Heavenly Father's love So radiant seemed my path, Jamie,
My cup so full of bliss,
How could I e'er dream Jamie,

Altogether, the tout ensemble of this protentious person was decidedly 'stagey.'

As I watched him, one of the under waiters of the hotel came whistling into the small reception room, behind me. This waiter was called Matthew Sparks, and 'jewels' and then tossed the young clown a coin.

went out of the office.

I am sorry for the count, observed the landlord to me; and doubt if he ever recovers anything he has lost. For some time a gang of thieves has been working between here and New York and scarcely a hotel has escaped. In several instances checks for baggage have been taken with other things, and of course when the checks were presented at the proper place the baggage has been given up to the thief. And, doctor, I don't mind telling you, that Breathlessly I awaited the result of Mathews a distinction between "persons" and "slaves," holding the latter merely as property, and not directly affix. The man thrust in his hand.

There was a snap of steel, the crunching any penalty for their unlawful acts. In other words, the question is something like in other words, the question is something like in other words, the question is something like time found curse in unmistakable English, followed by a gasp of pain.

I sprang into the room and turned up the gas, and the bright light streamed on the proper place the baggage has been given up to the thief. And, doctor, I don't mind telling you, that Caught in a Steel Trap.

The following story was told me by old friend, the venerable Dr. L.—g.

I sat one evening on the verandah of the principal hotel of a city on the N. Y. and E. R. R., smoking and watching the numerous persons that were loitering about the entrance.

Among these was a strange-looking man who had excited my curiosity at dinner by his peculiar dress and appearance.

He was very tall and strongly built, had large, flerce, black eyes, a dark, pale, complexion, a huge carefully-waved in the county state was the first of the fall and strongly built, had large, flerce, black eyes, a dark, pale, complexion, a huge carefully-waved in the county state of the hall and I reached the property stolen from the guests, were not worth the gold plate of the setting.

A Doctor, eh? it was the count's tones in New York, and the word in the county, and that no stone had fall-the distribution of several daments, the sible to always escape misfortunes of this kind in a hotel situated at the junction of several great railroads, where hundreds of guests were coming and going every day.

I could not advise him. It was impossible to always escape misfortunes of this locking it after me.

In five minutes more the room was fill-de with strong men, and although the downith strong men, and although the dosperately, he was overprowered and taken to prison.

He proved to be an old offender, and was of the United States.

The story of his trunks was of course false, and his wonderful diamonds, that were found in his room was fill-de with strong men, and although the downith story fooled the State Geologist, who sent a man to investigate the matter, and form the prison.

The proved to be an old offender, and was of the United States.

The story of his trunks was of course false, and his wonderful diamonds, that were found in his room was on the second floor; I have found that no mean of that name ever lived in the county wore. He exhibited also his prodigious diamonds too profusely for good taste. The cane he carried was unique, its gold head being shaped precisely like a small pistol.

tain from the promising young waiter, and it seemed without a doubt correct as I soon discovered that the Count's extravagance with money and his evident ignorance of American customs, made the gossip of the hotel.

'Why, said the clerk to me one morning, 'The Count is probably the richests man in the country. He has a large estate in Mexico and mines in South America. He lives high, too. He has the best rooms, the best wines, and most costly dinners. He makes odd mistakes occasionally, gets on the wrong floors and into the wrong rooms, and scarcely can speak nor understand a word of English. He came on from New York, and by some mistake his trunks were sent the wrong way. He is kept here waiting for them?

Just then the subject of his remarks, in this broken English, exhibiting his wristland and shirt-front, from which his studes and buttons had seemingly been roughly torn away.

And then gesticulating violently and muttering Spanish curses, he demanded to see the proprietor, who at once came in to hearthe complaint of the distinguished and unfortunate guest.

The count's complaint was something like this: He was sure he was in a land of thieves; his trunks probably had been stolen, and all the money he had in them, as well as the letters of credit. He was his board, and now he was robbed of all be had that was worth security, and now he was robbed of all be had that

And, doctor, I don't mind telling you, that the count was not the only loser last night. At least five of my transient guests were robbed of money and jewlery.'

'A detective would be a good fellow to have around,' I ventured to say.

'I shall telegraph to New York for one immediately,' he answered.

Four hours in succession that day Count Pedro Columbo sat close near the telegraph operator's desk, now watching the instrument with his fierce black eyes, and the people, who passed constantly to and fropast him into the hotel office.

But no news came of his missing trunks, and his pale face seemed to grow paler than ever.
