NORTH END ELECTRIC LIGHTS

Some members of the board of public safety who were seen this morning in reference to the statement of the cost of north end lights, which was published in yesterday's Times, were not inclined to discuss the matter until they had looked into it more fully.

Ad. Macne, who is one of the committee appointed to consider electric lighting said that about a month ago he was called to prepare a statement along the same lines as the one given to the Times by the street railway company's calculations. He says the land on which the plant is situated is exempt from taxation, that the city owns the water supply, that the charge for interest is too high and that all repairs and renewals are charged in operating expenses.
