A ST. STEPHEN SOLDIER HOME

William O'Dell Was Wounded At Langemarck

STIRRING DAY'S WORK

Hit While Well Doing His Duty—Fellowship of Noble Men of England With Noble Men of Fighting Ranks.

William O'Dell, a returned wounded soldier, tells the St. Stephen Courier of his experience in the trenches. The following is an extract:
In the morning of April 29 they were relieved by the 3rd Battalion, his own company being sent to reinforce two battalions that had suffered severely. Owing to the shell fire of the Germans they could not get far and had to dig themselves in. They were driven several times and had to dig in again. The ground was marshy, the trenches shallow, and at night they were lying in water.

After dark they were ordered to proceed to Langemarck, to prepare the trenches for the others. With the rations, they were each given 300 rounds of ammunition to carry back, making a considerable load.
They delivered these safely and were then informed that they would have to dig themselves in across the loop, to connect up the line of communication. As they advanced, parts of the trenches were blown to pieces and the men fell back right and left. They were on a frontage of 3,000 yards and got their trenches down only about three feet.
Daylight came at four o'clock and with it a German aeroplane appeared overhead and dropped signals showing their position. The artillery opened on them but they held on for three hours, though many were killed or wounded.
They were ordered to retire on the double quick and had to cross an open field for 500 yards, all uphill and with wire entanglements at the top.

O'Dell found himself alone, after a little and started to retire, concluding that it was "no place for a nervous man." He had gone about fifteen yards when he came to a pile of earth where some Germans had been buried and where their rifles were sticking out of the ground, so shallow was the covering thrown over them.
He had to mount this pile, and it was while doing so that he was wounded. One bullet went through both legs, near the ankles and in all he had seven holes in him, but none of them was "serious" as the soldier described them. His clothing was torn almost off him by shrapnel but none of that reached his body.

Anyone who knows big "Bill" O'Dell, knows that he is not made of the stuff that gives up for trifles, and wounded as he was, he kept on for three miles before he lay down and was on the ground for some time before he was picked up by a relief party. He had done his "bit," done it bravely and well, and gone just as far as he could.

He was first carried to the monastery of Mount Ducat, where his wounds, honorably received, were dressed, and next day he was taken by train to Boulogne. There he spent one night in hospital and next day was sent across the channel in the hospital ship Australian.

Two weeks were spent in hospital at Southsea and then with others he was taken to Lord Portman's magnificent estate, one of many that English gentlemen have placed at the disposal of the wounded soldiers.

Among the noblemen of England there is fellowship and comradeship with the other noble men of the empire who have also done what they could, an example that might be followed by some who would be of the "better class" elsewhere who cannot even be generous in their remarks concerning the boys who have done all that they could.

Here, with eight other wounded Canadians and two wounded Englishmen, Pte. O'Dell lived like a millionaire, receiving every kindness and every possible attention. Here they made and enjoyed the acquaintance of Lord and Lady Fitzmaurice and of Lord and Lady Stafford, Lord Stafford being the private secretary to King George, and who, while the soldier boys were there, received word that his only son had been killed in action.

At the end of seven weeks, O'Dell was able to leave and was granted seven days' sick leave, which were spent in London. He returned to headquarters and was sent to the 28th Reserve Battalion but had to "report sick" and was then returned to the hospital for six weeks more. At the end of that time he went before the medical board and was found "medically unfit" for further service and was returned to Canada.

HONOR FOR DR. WATSON

Canadian Philosopher to Be Given Degree By Knox College.

Toronto, Sept. 25.—Dr. John Watson, Queen's University, Kingston, known throughout the world as one of the greatest living philosophers, is to be honored with the degree of D. D. by Knox College at the opening of its new building next week.

There is more Cathar in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure by local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Cathar to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Cathar Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and cleanses the surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.
