OFF FOR THE WEST.

The Last of Them Got Away Late on Saturday Night.

A TURBULENT THRONG.

Sturdy Islanders Chafed at Delay, and Said Things -- The Grand Union Served 779 Meals -- Railway Station Officials in a Very Thankful Mood.

The grain gatherers have gone-have all one—and the railway station officials are ceedingly glad.

But those in the depot are not alon with their joy-the harvesters hearts are thanksgiving.

The gratitude is indeed mutual said a station official Saturday night as he regarded the filth strewn floor:

"We had 'em all yesterday, and all last night. We had 'em all today, and up to within an hour or so ago. Never want to grather like again."

The seven hundred and odd Prince Ed-The seven hundred and odd Prince Edward Islanders, who were compelled to remain over in the city during Saturday, or until the C. P. R.'s cars arrived, were undoubted a bellicose body. The early part of the day they waxed facetious and indulged in pointed remarks, respecting railroads generally. Then as the hours were along the humor of the situation proper, and the approaches to the station held a throng which was rapidly becoming

The harvesters, with much inward misgivings had pinned their weakening faith to it, and now it seemed to be much in the nature of a sneering mockery—this ironical announcement above their heads. They ranged from end to end of the station, building—turbulent—out of patience—hot and ready to sieze any opportunity whereby the tension might be re-

Presently, one ascended a truck, and in language, very direct, and garnished with frequent explosive observations, inquired how much longer his associates intended to bear the seemingly interminable wait. His words appeared to have the effect of inflaming the a ready inflammable minds. inflaming the aready inflammable minds of his auditors, for after some further impassioned haranguing about 150 of his auditors banded themselves together, and started for the C. P. R. building on King street. They marched in a compact body, but did not really enter the offices, and after some further desultory wanderings, swarmed back into the station.

About this time a man named McDon ald had succeeded in arousing the angel of three companions. They were in a car and the struggle becoming uproarious a couple of poincern n entered and convey ed McDonald to the van. He would not stay, however, and finally made his way to the e-evator, where exhausted by liquor and pummelling, he fell into a deep sumber—so profound was it that he was left behind when the harvest train eventually started.

About 10 o'clock, the cars arrived, ar with as much dispatch as possible, th harvesters were bundled on board. Th

During the day the Grand Union Hotel furnished 779 meals to the delayed men and their families. The C. P. R. supplied each with a meal ticket, and the day was a banner one in the history of the hotel.
