How can a mind so occupied be clear, cool, calculating, wise in the mere worldly sense, in personal matters or trifles? Why should not plotting knaves cheat him, and selfish basy-bodies entangle him in dubious correspondence? Many years had passed and the two had been to the two separated, not having seen each other. The young lady on a visit to her sister, who had resided not far distant, concluded to make a call upon her old acquaintant or ondition; and he knew how difficult, if not impossible, it was for others to understand it. If he had desired sympathy, assistance or medication, no one could render it. Work was the malady, and the work must go on. the work must go on.

Old-Fashioned Notions. A good deal bored, not to say disgusted with the drift of current intelligence and sick of encountering in every newspaper of our heap, in adipose typography, Western House, "The B.-T. Scandal," we glanced despairingly at a sheet printed far down in Texas. There we read with something of Coldstream indifference, that in Gair veston, Aug. 8, 1874, Mr. John Crotty and Matilda Baker, maiden, were married in St. Mary's Cathedral. Crotty was nothing to us, and we, be it admitted, were nothing to Crotty; Matilda was nothing to us, save as we are a general admirer of the sex; and we should have thought no more of this matrimonial matter if somebody who cheerfully signed with three stars had not tacked a communication to the nuptial advertisement. It was a really kind communication, not to say gushing. It was in a strain of the highest hymenial rapture. It began thus in the fluest of language: "From the roseate blush of morn to the melancholy Flour, Fish, Pork and Grogeries, Bride be attended with all that is joyous and elevating in the commubial relation!"

As we read this we felt good-natured and said "Amen!" softly and tenderly. We really do hope that Mr. and Mrs. Jack Crotty will have a life of the old sort, with the usual variety of humdrum happiness and small spats meaning nothing. May Mr. Crotty never discover that he has a mission, or that his soul is of the elevated sort! May Mrs. Crotty boar children (dear little Crotties) and nursure them with no shadow of a theory in the best style. Call and see Specimens.
