icos ed in the atternoon, she spoke kindly to him, and asked his help in closing the school-noom door. He readily complied. As she turned homeward, Joe followed. At length she inquired:

"Have you any sister, Joseph?"

The right chord was touched.

"I had one sister," he said, "little Mary, but she died;" and thus encouraged by the ready sympathy of his listener, he went on to tell that Mary was his only sister, and that he used to take care of her, and carry her out of doors, and draw her in the wagon he had nade for her, and that she loved him "more than ny one else did," and always used to run to the door to meet him when he came home. "But she is dead now," he added, "and I have not anybody that takes care of me. She had a fever, and made did not know me when I speke to her, and in just a week she died. Her grave is right over here," he continued, "and perhaps you would like to see it

"The teacher willingly went with him, asking him still further about little Mary as they passed along, till at 1-ngth they approached the grave and as down upon a stone near it, poor Joe could no longer wipe away the tears as he had done, when, one by one, they trickied down, for the fountaint within were broken up. He covered his lace with his hands and wipt aloud.

"Sie's dead," he exciaimed again, "and nobody cars for in no x."

Joe was submed and won by the power of kindness. And hard indeed must be the neart that kindness.

Let me tour a chord of compassion, as I point to the poor sh vering flock of sheep, exposed to the cold air this morning, as they have been a nee breakfast. Pray turn them into the barn, and give them something to pick over, at least if not to eat, that they may drive away the thought and feeling of cold, which threathens to shake them to pieces, I address every man who leaves his sheep and cattle exposed to the weather, when it is, as it is now, below freezing, especially when the wind is strong enough to open the wool and stir the hair of the cows. No animal in this state for long and freeguent periods, was ever known to make the most of the food given it, or to improve in flesh and fat and muscle. It is enough for me to hear the cattle lowing in the barn, or see them wisking about the yard uneasily, or to feed them irregularly to satisfy myself that at the following milking the quantity will be less han usual, or that the oxen, when working, with be fessless and disobedient, or weak and unwilling to haust their load; and I always look here for the cause of the evil. An interesting anecdote, illus rating this fact, may be found in the Farmer's Guine, where a great duninution of milk was the reaut of irregular tending of a lot of cows in possession of the autnor.
