

Christianity was introduced into Denmark by Willibrord, about 700 A.D., but the country was not Christianized until English priests and monks came over in the reign of Canute (1019-1035) and organized the Danish Church. Corruption set in, the nobles and priests commenced to squabble and it did not end till the Reformation tenets finally obtained the upper hand in 1536. To Denmark, the Reformation brought new beginnings in every department of life. At the present day, while the Church is officially described as "Evangelical Reformed" it is Lutheran in every sense. Most of the other important denominations are represented in Denmark, but the number of their adherents is small.

In literature, much has been accomplished in Denmark, although very little has so far been translated, but the names of Martensen in Theology, Brandes in Literary Criticism, Hoffding in Philosophy, are familiar. In art again, who has not seen a reproduction of Thorwaldsen's Christ, and he is one artist only amongst many.

DANES IN CANADA.

Early in the nineteenth century there was a large immigration to North America, particularly to the United States. In 1892 over 10,000 departed from their native land in search of wealth and a state of life denied to them in their own thickly populated country. The number decreased towards
