The greatest risk which investors in mining companies run is that the treasury stock will not realize sufficient money to place the mine on a dividend paying basis, so that frequently a reorganization at an increased capital, or sale of the property, is the only alternative, after a long period spent in development. The exploration company is intended to divide its risks among a number of prospects or mines, so that its eggs are not adver ising contracts or collect for subscriptions. all in one basket.

While there will always be many shrewd investors looking for stock in promising properties, it is our belief that the great mass of the public will prefer to go it blind as of yore, and trust their money to exploration and development companies, to obviate the necessity on their part of enquiring into the merits of properties before buying into them.

HEROIC MINERS.

It is not alone in the pages of Bret Harte that we meet with heroism among miners. Flynn, of Virginia, is a type and not an uncommon one. Rossland is not old, even as mining camps go, but it has already been the province of THE MINER to chronicle at least two heroic
