Oh, what do you mean?"

"I won't tell you. I have to think of it. And tell you the Lord only knows what may happen tomorrow, if that poor fellow holds out as he's begun."

"Horrid!" said Emmeline, every drop of blood running from her cheeks. "O Casy, do tell what I shall do!"

"What I've done. Do the best you can; do what you must, and make it up in, hating, and crying."

"I wanted to make one drink some of his foul remedy," said Emmeline; "and I have it."

"You'd better drink," said Casy. "I have it, too; and now I can't live without it. One must do something; things don't look so dreadful when you take that."

"Mother need to tell me never to touch any such thing," said Emmeline.

"Mother told you," said Casy, with a thrilling voice.

"What use is it for mothers to say anything?
You are all to be bought and paid for, and your soul belongs to whoever she is. That's the way it goes. I say, drink brandy; drink all you can, and it'll make things come easier."

"I wish I understood him!" said Emmeline, wringing her hands.

"That's an old wish with me," said Casy.
"I've got used to wishing that. I'd die, if I dared to," said Casy, looking out into the darkness with still, fixed despair, which was the last expression of her face when she died.

"It would be wicked to kill one's self," said Emmeline.

"I don't know why; no wickedness than things we live and do day after day. But the sisters told me things when I was in the country that made me afraid to die. If it would only be the end of us, why then?"

Emmeline turned away, and hid her face in her hands.

While this conversation was passing in the chamber, Legree, overcome with his cares, had slept to sleep in the room below. Legree was not an habitual drunkard. His coarse, strong nature, craved and could endure a continual stimulus, that would have utterly wrecked and ruined him. But a deep underlying spirit of cynicism prevented his often yielding to such temptation.

This night, however, in his feverish affright, he had sunk into the depths of a stupor, from which he awoke with a start, and then he had shaken off his sleep, and followed, with drooping spirit, through the dark house, until he had come to the room above, and sound asleep.

On his arrival, he had soon to enter the dark world of the past, and thus lead whomever he might meet to the mystic scenes of silence. Legree, dressed in his livery and vestments, which were within him, he had worn them, and then, that is all smoothly round his neck, and tightened, and tightened, and he could no draw his breath; and then he thought voices whispered to him—whispers that chilled him to the bones. This seemed to him he was on the edge of a frightful abyss, holding on and struggling in mortal fear, while dark hands stretched out, and were pulling him over; and Casy came behind him, laughing, and pushed him. And then rose up that silent veiled figure, and drew aside the veil. It was his master; and the turn of away from him, and to fall down, down, amid a confused noise of shrieks, and groans, and shouts of demon laughter—said Legree awoke.

Gaily the rosy hue of dawn was stealing into the room. The morning-star stood, with its long, pale eye of light, looking down on the mass of sin, from out the brightening sky. Oh, with what frequency, what ardency and beauty is each new day born! as if to say to inanimate men,

"Now, then, stand up, and be men!"

He sprang from his bed, and, with a loud laugh, and a shout, he rushed into the room, and, with a bound, he was at the door.

"I am a man!" he cried, and, with a loud laugh, and a shout, he rushed into the room, and, with a bound, he was at the door.
