European.

The Jews in Europe.

The dread which the Jews are awakening in Eastern Europe almost equals the dread felt for them in Western Europe six hundred years ago, and is based on the same grounds.
They display a talent for accumulation, with which Christians cannot compete, and which tends to make them an ascendant caste. It is gravely asserted in the Roumanian Parliament that the true difficulty in the way of allowing them the equal rights which were secured by the treaty of Berlin, is the certainty entertained by the Roumanians and Servians that they would gradually oust the peasantry till they possessed the whole land. In Hungary it is asserted, even in Reuter's telegrams, that they have purchased so many estates as to make an alteration in the constitution needful, and German literature is full of the success of the Jews in ousting the ancient families. Their remarkable success in politics and their instinct for acquiring pecuniary control of the press are observed in all free countries, and have recently called forth pamphlets and even books, penetrated with a most energetic hate. Considering that a hundred years ago the Jews were a despised caste, their rise into a dreaded order has been singularly rapid—too rapid, we imagine, for them to be perfectly safe in their new position. The explanation of their success is, we presume, that their peculiar capacity exactly suits the condition of modern life.

Souvenirs of the Prince.

The poor Empress, writes a correspondent of the Boston Journal, in her melancholy seclusion of Camden house has the sympathy of everybody, including the ladies who are her old enemies, and who would not admit once upon a time that she was a good wife and mother. She received the Queen of England the other day in the famous boudoir, where she has collected all the souvenirs which must hereafter have only a tragical interest for her. There under a glass case she keeps the casts of the right hand of the Emperor and of the young Prince, and these two hands are represented as holding the telegraph dispatch announcing the adoption of the law ordering the reconstruction of the column in the Place Vendome. There also on a dainty shelf is a little white satin rosette that the Prince wore on the day of his first Communion. By a singular stroke of luck this tiny piece of ribbon was found intact in the midst of the ruins of the Tuileries, preserved in some miraculous manner from even a single stain. And there, too, on a pedestal and carefully shielded from harm, is a marble bust of the the Prince, which was likewise uninjured by the fire. The grief of the ex-Empress is overwhelming, and she wanders from room to room weeping the whole day long. As the bedchamber and study of the Emperor have been kept exactly as they were on the day of his death, so are the rooms of the young Prince left precisely as he quitted them, never to return and the beds of the Emperor and the Prince are constantly covered with fresh violets. In the chamber of the Emperor stands a large wardrobe which contains every article which Napoleon III. took from the Tuileries when he went to the war, that, on the 4th of September, 1870, he would call his own, namely, his uniform.

The semi-official 'Agence Russe' of Sept. 25, formally denies the assertion that Russian intrigues are being carried on in Afghanistan, and defies the English press to name a single one of the numerous Russian emissaries who they say are agitating in Herat. The Russian Government, says the Agence acts openly and not clandestinely. When England was preparing for war against Russia, she sent to Cabul not a secret but an acknowledged agent in the person of General Stolietoff. Had Russia wished to place difficulties in the way of England she could, instead of taking the ridiculous measures ascribed to her, have liberated Abdul Bahman the legal pretender to the Afghan throne; whereas, on the contrary, she is keeping a watch on him in Samarcand, and preventing his flight into Aghanistan. The Agence concludes by saying that events in Cabul and in the Turcoman territory point to the necessity of a good understanding between Russia and England.

Her Majesty's Reign.

Very remarkable changes have taken place during the 42 year's reign of Queen Victoria. She has out-lived by several years every Bishop and every Judge whom she found seated on those benches in England, Scotland, and Ireland. She has witnessed the death of every Premier who has served under her except Lord Beaconsfield and Mr. Gladstone.
Not a single Cabinet Minister of her uncle and predecessor's days now survives; and of those who held inferior offices under her first and favorite Premier, Lord Melbourne, there can be found among the living only Lord Halifax (then Mr. Charles Wood) and Lord Howick (now Lord Grey.) Of the members of the Privy Council who sat in June 1837, to administer to her the oaths, only four survive.
She has received the homage of four Archbishops of Canterbury, and of four Archbishops of York, and of five Archbishops of Chichester, Litchfield, and Durham, successively. She has filled each of the three Chief Justiceships twice at least; she has received the addresses of four successive Speakers of the House of Commons; she has entrusted the Great Seal of the Kingdom to no less than nine different Lord Chancellors; and she has commissioned eight successive Premiers to form no less than 13 different administrations.

The Princess of Wales in Den- mark.

A Copenhagen correspondent writing on the 19th ult., says—The Princess of Wales and the three young princesses are daily taking excursions in the neighborhood of Bernsdorf Castle, or taking short trips on the water. Thus on Tuesday her royal highness with her daughters as well as the Czarevitch and the Czarevna, with their children, went on a cruise in the Sonud, on board the Russian yacht the Czarevna, escorted by two Russian men-of-war. Yesterday the princess, as well as all the members of the royal family at present here, was present at the performance in the Theatre Royal of "Rigoletto," in which Mad'le Schou appeared. The immense popularity which the Princess Alexandra enjoyed in Denmark before her marriage—she was generally by the Copenhageners called by the pet name Oiestenen (the apple of our eye)—has not diminished during her twenty years' residence in her new home, judging from the enthusiasm with which she is greeted wherever she appears in public. The health of her royal highness, as well as of the young princesses, is everything that can be wished for. The visit of the princess is now drawing towards its close. The Prince of Wales is expected here about the middle of next week, and after a couple of days their royal highnesses will return to England, while the Czarevitch and the Czarevna will return to Russia, and the Court will then reassume its usual quiet aspect.

A merchant sitting in his office in N. Y. city recently received an answer to a despatch sent to Shanghai, China, six hours previously. Shanghai is 36,000 miles distant from New York by telegraph, and the message not making allowance for delivery at the two cities, travelled at the rate of 100 miles a minute.

How The Gypsies Honored Their Queen.

Here is a sample of gypsy honesty.
Early in this century the queen of a tribe, or heir-apparent to the sovereignty—I forget which—died. She was but a child, aged fourteen, and her name was Paradise Buckler. The tribe was then camped on Bell Health, in Worcestershire, and they desired to bury her in the churchyard of Bel-broughton, in which parish she died.
Being an unmarried girl, the deceased was to be carried by nothing but white pocket-handkerchiefs and the coffin was to be covered with the same. Every gypsy of the tribe also wanted a white pocket-handkerchief for his own use on the occasion. They went round and "borrowed" these commodities, and the villagers and the gentry gave them up in much the same spirit as the Egyptians did when the Israelites "borrowed" of them, not caring to incur the enmity of the tribe by the refusal. But when the ceremony was over each handkerchief was duly restored to its owner, beautifully washed and bleached. In one or two cases where the borrowed articles had been slightly injured they were replaced by others of the finest cambic. To this day some of the "oldest inhabitants" tell of the spectacle of that funeral of the gypsy child-queen and how the gypsies gathered by hundreds from the country round to attend the ceremony; and most of all, how astonished the parishioners were at the honesty of the gypsies on the occasion. Besides the scrupulous return of the borrowed handkerchiefs, there were no complaints of thefts during the irroad of the tribe for the ceremony.
They seemed to have felt themselves in the light of guests and under obligations for the loans made to them, and returned the compliment by a temporary regard for "meum and tuum." The gypsies erected a handsome square stone tomb over the remains of their young queen, and they keep it in repair to this day. I notice that some correspondents in the "Standard" states that gypsies like to obliterate the name and all traces of their dead. They do not do so in the case of Paradise Buck-ler. The inscription on her tomb is this day, though more than half a century old. Gypsies, "en passant," often visit it. It stands on the southeast side of the church-yard, and I have myself often read the inscription on it.

The Strange Story of a Surgeon.

"Pray, what was that?" was asked.
THE DEAD TO LIFE.

The doctor reflected for a few moments, and then he spoke as follows:

"When you publish what I am about to tell you it will set the whole country ringing. Accompanied by my friends Judge Warren and Dr. Chambers, I went, last week, to one of the up-town hospitals whither we had been invited by Prof. Doremus and the house physicians. On our arrival we were shown at once to the dissecting room.
At the foot of an amphitheatre of seats stood a long table, on which rested some immovable object, covered with a white sheet. Most of the seats were occupied by medical students from Bellevue and Roosevelt hospitals. Myself and party were assigned to chairs on the platform. Shortly after 8 o'clock the white sheet was removed, and I saw on the table the nude body of a man. Presently Dr. White stepped down by the table, and said:

"My friends, the body before me is that of a man bled to death. He was employed in a planing mill on West sixteenth street, near North river. He fell against one of the swift revolving saws, one of the large arteries in his arm was severed, and the blood, which is life, flowed out before assistance could arrive."

THE VITAL FLUID.

"The doctor paused," continued Dr.
Bigelow, "for a few moments, looking meanwhile, attentively at the body.
Then he continued: 'There is a mere cessation of life, because the blood was diverted from its natural channel. I can discover no injury save the severed
