It is also the most economical remedy in use, as one tablespoonful of Caustic Balsam will produce more actual results than a whole person gave vent to another groan, and led by the sound, I soon stumbled upon the prostrate body of a man. "What's up?" asked I quickly, as I bent

He replied by another groan, and writhed as if in terrible pain. Finding that I could get nothing out of him, I quickly collected a pile of dry branches, and lit a fire. The flames flured up, and by their light I again looked at the stranger. I could scarcely believe my eyes. It was my brother, who had shared my boyhood's troubles and joys.

I stood for some time as one stupefied; but when he uttered another groan I ten-

I stood for some time as one stupefied; but when he uttered another groan I tenderly bent over him and quickly unbuttoned his coat. A ghastly wound in his side met my view, and I realized that it had been made by a ball from a pistol. A fierce desire rose in my breast—the desire for revenge. Can you blame me?

"Who did it, Alf?" asked I, fiercely.

"Tell me who did it, and I'll tear his heart out of his bosom!"

out of his bosom!"

I concluded that he had learned to know my brother tried to answer me, but could not ar iculate a word. I ran to a n i hoo ng brook and fined my hat with wa er, and letting him drink some, I moistened nis face and hands; then, wetting my handkerchief, I placed it on the wound. I knew my brother could not live, and I only wished to find out who did the terrible deed.

"Tell me who did it, Alf?" petitioned I.

"Promise you won't murder!" said he, faintly.

"I'll let the law take its course."

"Tell me who did it, and I'll tear his heart came regularly.

I concluded that he had learned to know my brother by sight, and meeting him in the forest had slain him in order to put him out of his way. My brother had doubtlesly intended to say:

"The little finger on his right hand was bandaged," or something to that effect.

I was not long in letting "the law take its course," and Mr. Hiram Sheffield was arrested and thrown into prison.

At his trial I gave my evidence, and he was condemned to die. Even when I was told that he had committed suicide, I felt that my desire for revenge was satiated, faintly.

The stopped suddenly, and quickly placed his hand on the wound as if it pained him. I gave him more water, but he neverspoke another word. I stood over the corpse a few moments, and gave full play to my vears afterward, she acknowledged that few moments, and gave full play to my thoughts. These were abruptly stopped by the neigh of the horse. I then realized desire for revenge again took possession of me, and, naturally enough, my thoughts turned and dwelt upon the murderer.

There were many of that description, and it would be hard to find the murderer of my brother from among them. His last words were the only clue: "Little finger on right-" Most probably he meant "hand;" he could not well have meant anything else. But what of the little finger on his right hand? Was it hurt in any way, cut or bruised? He might have meant that, or bruised? He might have meant that, or he might also have meant that the finger was off entirely; in fact I at last concluded that he intended to say the latter.

I soon reached the village and deposited my burden at my boarding place. No parents were living, and the only ones who really mourned were Nellie Burton—who had been engaged to my brother-and my-

After the funeral, I proceeded to the place where the murder had been committed, to see whether I could not find another clue. I found one thing which, I thought, might prove something, but hardly had any expectations that it would. It was a piece of cloth, of a bright color and fantastic print, which had been bound round a finger. I placed it care-fully in my inner vest pocket and went

I did not feel like hunting out the murderer yet, but decided to remain in the village for some time. I thought, too, that the villain might be in our very

A week after the funeral I found myself at Nellie Burton's house as a visitor. I there was introduced to a stranger, whose name was Hiram Sheffield. I had not been there long, when I saw he was aspiring to gain the hand of Nellie. This didnot please me overmuch. He seemed to not please me overmuch. He seemed to feel disappointed when she did not seem merry; for it showed that sne had cared more for Alfred Lawrence, my brother, Yes, undoubtedly he was my brother's murderer! I felt as though I could scarcely keep my fingers from his throat. But why had he done it? What was my brother to him? Then I thought of Nelue Burton—perhaps she had something to do with it?

I was riding along a country road, with dense woods on both sides. It was fast getting dark, and although I cannot say that I feared anything, still I had no desire to be in the shadow of the trees in the dark; hence I was in a hurry. I still had at least five miles to go, and it was doubtful whether I would reach the end of the forest before dark.

I rode on a mile, in silence, when suddenly I thought I heard a groan.

"Whoa, Nell!"

My horse stopped, and I listened attentively. Hearing nothing, I started my Fortunately I had the scrap which I had picked up in the woods with me. I took it to out and held it to the other piece. It fitted exactly, and the print was just the same. I handed her back the piece, and presently Hiram came in. I kept up appearances as well as I could, answering his questions in monosyllables, but asking none myself.

During the interview I observed his right hand very carefully, and at one time, when he put his hand to his mouth, the little finger was shown plainly.
