

VOICES OF THE PAST YEARS.

I hear the sound of moaning swells
That splash upon the shore,
And in my dreaming mood I hear
A lost voice, o'er and o'er.

THE DIAL declares, with some asperity, that it is "an open secret among those having practical acquaintance with literary affairs that men who cannot write at all sometimes achieve reputations as brilliant essayists. The desire to assemble notoriety in a table of contents has led more than one magazine editor to connive at the deception whereby some public man signs his name to a paper prepared for him by his literary mercenary or his private secretary."
