The Domain of Woman. TALKS BY "TERESA,"

Are there any of us, I wonder, who can look back upon the past without one keen feoling of regret for things done or said that might have been avoided, things that seemed so small at the time, but which have gained in importance with the circling years. Perhaps a cruel word was spoken that could mover be recalled, a contemptation speech set off some weak one's nasty temper, and led to an almost hidolong estrangement, a half veiled sneer lowered and seemer lower of all, some loved one loft us, could ye calimation, or last and keenest pain of all, some loved one loft us, could ye ped upon a journey to come back no more.

Of the agony of that hitter regret embodied in the words, "I wish I had or last and keonest pain of all some loved one left we, coldly epod upon a journay to come back no more.

O, the agony of that bitter regret imbedied in the words, "I wish I had been kinder, I wish I had shown more to when we parted for the last time!"
The last time! the most sorrowful words that can be spoken; nover to most again on earth, never more to hear loving words from the lips now silent in death, never more to say, "Dear, I love you," and soe the answering smile your caress awakens. Every farrowell, how over brief, may be for the last time, if we realize this as we ought to do, there would be no more cold partings, no more half hearted farewells. And we can realize it if we try, every time we say good bye we may remember if we will that we may incove soe our friend again. If this thought were more in our hearts there would be fower occasions for vain after regrets or self repreach.

And yet it need not make us morbid, human life is uncertified.

after regrets or self repreach.

And yet it need not make us morbid, human life is uncertain at the best; when we awake we can never tell whether we shall be alive at night. Let us try and be kinder towards each other, let us profit by the memory of past errors and cultivate a spirit of gentleness and forbearance; and it will help us to become sweeter and more ounsiderate if we keep constantly in our minds the thought that each parting, however brief, may be for the last time.

How healing and consoling is the beautiful doctrine of prayer for the dead, to feel that our loved ones are not beyond our reach, that we can still help them by our prayers and be helped by theirs, for though they cannot pray for the prayers, they can be provided they cannot be they can be the

SOISTION:

"O, It is sweet to think of those trust are departed,
While murmured Aves sink to silence tenderhearted,
While the trust are no pain are transpling and the dead live sgain in hearts that love is filling."

A correspondent asked my opinion necestly on the question of concentration to a particular purpose, oversus diffusion of talents for the general good. It is a large subject and I have only a small space in which to treat of it, seldes, to lay down hard and fast rules in such, or in fact any cases, is impossible. Individual circumstances substitute in the same and surroundings have a great deal to do with what it best or most expedient in conduct; it is certain, however, that some amount of concentration, either in a particular line of study, or to a particular since in the study of the second of our girls. Every talent, no matter how small so that it be duly and propriy entitivated, conduces in some measure to the general good. Honce, if our house, another for housewiftry, (a talent unfortunately too little thought of nowadays) and each perfects herself in that one particular branch; she becomes capable of giving pleasure and instead that the study of the stud more conductive to the foundation or a firm and steadfast charactor.

Some people advocate the training of our girls to become good wives and mothers. This is all very well, and very wise in one way, but very unwise in another. All girls cannot marry, therefore to concentrate the training of each one of them to one end and in one particular groove is absurd. Girls must be taught to recognize the fact that, though marriago is the natural and desirable state of those living in the world, yet they are not to concentrate their whole aims and energies to the purpose of securing a husband, in which process their natural talents are allowed to run to waste, their chof studies being dross and flirtation.

It is equally unwise to run, as some dress and flirtation.

It is equally unwise to run, as some do, to the opposite extreme, and teach a contempt for everything but what is proudly termed "independence," in other words a contempt for woman's most ascrod duties, for the obligations of life, and for everything but a line of conduct as nearly approaching that of a man as a woman may venture upon. Every girl who concentrates herself to this cort of independence is certain, seemer or later, to become a burden to herself, and a misery to all who have the misfortune to be connected with her.

The truly independent woman is the one who, has an passed through the hard school of experience, and profited thereby, comes out roady for anything life may have in store.

life may have in store.

If it is her fate to be a wife she is willing to take the duties and responsibilities thereof, and to discharge them as becomes her dignity. If she must battle with the world on her own account she is equally ready, and searching out some special occupation, she perfects herself therein, learning everything there is to be learned, always quick with a holping hand to others loss fortunate than herself, and witbal, over tenacious of her womauly privileges; she is not facing the world as a mn, but as a woman, therein lies her safeguard, and she knows it.

By all means let our girls find out man, but as a woman therein lies her safeguard, and she knows it.

By all means let our girls find out their talent and entitivate it, renombering that we are not units but parts of a whole, and that every step we take to-wards perfecting ourselves, helps in some measure to perfect the world. Let us remember this, when we solishily weigh our own convenience against the welfare of our friends and relatives, and as we expect them to study us, and give way to us to us, too, study and give way to us to us, too, study and give way to them, and thus we shall become truly beneficial and truly independent. Above all, let us remember this, that if now wishes to attaue excellence in any particular thing, it is as well always to strive after that excellence in everything one undertakes, and not the least of the methods to be pursued is attention to trilles, for as Michael Augelo said to a friend who joked him about his primute attention to details, "Trilos makes perfection, and perfection is no trille."

I hope my readers will not forget the Annual Christmas Sale in aid of the Sistors of the Precious Blood, which commences Nov. 23rd. and will be continued till Saturday Nov. 23th. It will be held in the Assembly rocms of the Confederation Life Building, and from all accounts promises to be as great a success as it deserves. A concert will be given overy ovening with the assistance of the very best talent in the city, and in addition numberless other attractions will be in ovidence.

"I would rif "Toreas" will bethere?"

tractions will be in ovidence.
"I wondor if 'Torcas' will bothere?"
I hear some reader exclaim. Of course
I shall, my dear, I always try to praction that I proach as far as possible; but if you go with the hope of getting a peep, like Tom of Coventry, I fear you will be disappointed, as "Teresa" besides being a very insignificant little person, include to maintain the strictest incognite.

T. A. Frenall.—If you are without a certificate of any kind, I fear you would not obtain a teacher's position that would be worth having. If you have a good English certificate, I should thick you would succeed anywhere, but you do not say whether you have one of any description. If you will describe your position fully, I shall be better able to advise you. Look through the adversements in the daily papers, there are always advertisements for teachers. I should advise you to qualify properly, if you have not done so, it is the best way. I know of no list of reformatories for
