

identified an existing supply relationship with a parent or subsidiary as the reason they did not wish to learn more about Canadian companies.

U.S. importers responding to the survey indicated that they would prefer initially to receive information on Canadian companies through brochures, industry publications and trade fairs. However, direct contact with the manufacturer and the recommendations of personal contacts were said to be the key factors influencing the purchasing decision.