TO MAINTAIN FREIGHT RATES.

Ruilroad Magnates Representing 25 Companies Thus Agreed in New York Yesterday.

Washington, March 23.—The presidents, general managers or other representatives of about 25 railroad companies, comprising almost the entire trunk line service between Chicago and Lake Michigan and the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and beyond, were in executive conference throughout the day with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The result was a verbal assurance on the part of all the roads represented to maintain uniform tariffs, thorough co-operation and the appointment of a committee to confer with the commission to-morrow, looking to more definite specifications for securing general stability in freight rates.

s saved the country. Not long since Mr.
Tarte had taken Sir Wilfrid Laurier down to Quebec in one of those palace cars, which used to form a subject of scandal in other days, for the purpose of having a conference with Premier Marchand, doubtless to have him introduce a Senate reform resolution. But all they secured was a declaration, published the next day, to the effect that the "Government approved of the Senate and was satisfied that the interests of Quebec would be conserved if the Senate were reformed, so as to be responsible." They dare not approve of Laurier's proposal. The fact was this was no question for the provinces to pronounce upon at all. So that the course being adopted was unconstitutional. The Legislatures had no mandate from the people to pronounce on the subject of Senate reform.

On the subject of the Maniltoba school question, Mr. Casgrain, continued, "we were told it had been settled." But what he wanted to know was, had it been settled to the satisfaction of the Maniltoba school question, Mr. Casgrain, continued, "we were told it had been settled." But what he wanted to know was, had it been settled for the maniltoba school question, Mr. Casgrain, continued, "we were told it had been settled." But what he wanted to know was, had it been settled in accordance with the pledges given to them by members of the House? Certainly it had house? Certainly it had been settled in accordance with Laurler's pledge given at St. Rochs in 1896, when he declared that his first act upon attaining power would be to appoint a commission, with Sir Oilver Mowat at its heart with an excitation of the wanted to know was, had it been settled." History would show, he added, that whereas an English Protestant Premier had endeavored to restore to the Catholics of Manitoba their constitutional rights, a French Catholic leader had interfered to destroy them.

A Word to Mr. Tarte.

Mr. Casgrain concluded by paying his compliments to Mr. Tarte. He was proud of that gentleman as a Conservative, as he termed himself. Liberal clubs in Quebec, and even the honorable gentlemen whom he saw opposite, had invelghed against him and declared that Tarta must go. But Mr. Tarte was there to satisfy and lead the Liberal Government. The pluck and perseverance which he acquired while in the Conservative ranks was standing Mr. Tarte in good stead.

Mr. Craig Explains Why.

Mr. Craig after rallying the leader of the Government upon his failure to answer the arraignment of Sir Charles, went on to say that if the country is prosperous it was because the Liberals had refrained from carrying out their promise to destroy protection. And if the expdus had ceased it was because the doleful cry of Sir Elchard Cartwright was no longer heard in the land, nor his eulogies of the United States. As to reciprocity the Conservatives had always been in favor of a fair bargain, but had never been willing to sacrifice any of Canada's rights to obtain it. He hoped the High Commissioners would prove worthy of their trust and remember that they were the representatives of Canada as well as of England. Their first duty was to Canada, and if they made a treaty it should be a fair one to this country.

In the matter of the plebiscite, political considerations had been allowed to anterfere with it, while he did not think the vote justified the Government in introducing a prohibition measure; still it was a fact that temperance people had not been fairly treated.

Mr. Broder had just commenced speaking when the House rose for dinner.

when the House rose for dinner.
Trifling With the Country. After recess Mr. Broder, continuing, said that the Premier and his supporters were to-day trying to get away from themselves and the sooner they got away from there the better, because they had been triding with the country and on the plebiscite were now stifling public opinion. They did not want to carry prohibition and so they took steps to prevent it being carried. They were not honest in their treatment of the country in the matter. Charges had been made of trifling with the ballot boxes, and he cited a case in which a man had recorded his vote 17 times. Where, he asked, was the Minister of Agriculture that night? Why was he not in his place to give an account of his action in the matter?

But they seemed to be completely out of order. They had rumblings low down. Their stomachs had got sour.

A Voice—How?

Mr. Broder—They had too much Tarte. [Roars of laughter]. If the Government were in earnest and were honest there was nothing to prevent them carrying out their principles on the matter of tariffs. There was a buoyant revenue, but to carry out their promises was the last thing they were doing now. [Cheers].

Mr. Osler as Censor.

Mr. E. B. Osler (West Toronto), who was warmly cheered by the Opposition, complained of the enormous amount of time that was wasted in the House personal abuse. The older members of the House took up most of the time in abusing each other like pickpockets, and if half what they said of each other were true, no members who had sat in that House for 15 years were fit to remain there any longer. By throwing out the Yukon bill the Senate had achieved great benefit to the country, and reflected great tendit upon themselves. He characterized the pleblscite as a humbug, and the Government as merely hanging together, each member afraid of the other, and each one afraid the other may get an official appointment before him. [Hear, hear]. He repudiated the constitutionalism of abolishing the second chamber. The speech from the throne was so barren it was a wonder it could have been put into the mouth of His Excellency.
