War Has Not Killed Sport.
New York, Sept. 6.—Conclusive proof that sport is very much alive despite war conditions, is found in the enormous attendance at baseball games on Labor Day. It was estimated that 150,000 fans attended the games in eight major league cities, the Giants and Braves drew a total of 80,000 at the Polo Grounds, while a similar number attended the battles between the White Sox and Tigers in Chicago. More than 100,000 saw the Yankees twice defeat the Red Sox in Boston, while the attendance was about 15,000 each in Brooklyn, St. Louis, Philadelphia and Cleveland. The turnout in Pittsburg for two games was in the neighborhood of 10,000.
No More Sunday Games.
New York, Sept. 6.—President Ebbetts, of the Brooklyn Baseball Club announced that no attempt would be made to play the Sunday games planned for the next Sunday pending the decision of the National baseball case now before the court. It was the object of the club to play games in connection with Sunday contests for worthy war charities, strictly in compliance with the law which permits Sunday exhibitions for charitable purposes, and the Brooklyn Club feels that it is being unjustly discriminated against in its charitable efforts.
Dallas Wins Texas League.
Dallas, Tex., Sept. 4.—The Texas League baseball season closed on Labor Day, with Dallas winning the 1917 championship. The league was cut to six clubs in midseason, but to the war, Galveston and Beaumont dropped out of the circuit. The six remaining clubs enjoyed good patronage.
Jack Barry Succeeds.
Boston, Sept. 6.—No matter what may be the finish of the American League race it must be said that Jack Barry has made a good manager of the Red Sox. To be sure, he had a world championship team placed in his hands when he was engaged to lead the outfit, but that does not always signify.
Barry took that world's championship team and kept it in the running all the way. There may be little things he has done which has not met the approval of the critics, but take it big and large, he has made few mistakes. He has handled his pitching staff with fine judgment. He safely rode out three slumps as a staunch vessel rides out a gale of wind. This is going some, for it should be remembered that one has to learn to be a baseball manager.
AQUATIC.
Break's World's Record.
Honolulu, Sept. 4.—Duke Kahanamoku equalled his own world's record of 23 seconds in winning the fifty yards swimming race in the sport carnival yesterday.
Norman Ross, San Francisco, Cal., won the 44-yard race in five minutes, 35.5 seconds.
Miss Claire Galligan, New York, broke the established world's record in a 220-yard race for women. She swam of 3
