A MATERNITY DRESS.

Figured cotton voile is used to develop the practical, yet stylish, maternity dress. To make it requires 4 yards of 44-inch material with 1/4 yard of 18-inch all-over lace for the waist. The collar and cuffs are of linen, made to be adjusted to any frock.

Simplicity marks the construction as well as cutting. First, the upper edge of the lower front section of the waist is turned under on slot perforations; then lapped on upper front section to small "o" perforations, notches even. Stitch, then turn under edges of side front and back on slot perforations and baste. Gather upper edge of side front between double "T" perforations, sew to back as notched. Adjust front to position, lapping folded edge of side front and back to line of small "o" perforations.

CONSTRUCTION GUIDE 5737

Stirring Tale Brought By Priest From The Battlefield

Gallant English Joke and Pray as Leaden Wave Sweeps Ranks—Terrible Times at Mons

New York, Sept. 28.—A tale of warfare from the British camp in France, vivid with description of the way the English forces faced death on the battlefield, of the jokes they cracked and the prayers they said with the bullets sweeping their ranks, was brought to New York aboard the steamship Mauretania by Rev. Fr. James Molloy, a native of Trenton, N. J., who served as chaplain for several weeks with one of the British regiments in France.
"In a modern battle there is an overpowering sense of unreality," he said. "The business of seeing men kill each other seems mechanical because of the preponderance of the machine element in the affairs of the human element simply bleeds and dies, but the machines continue in their perfection of the conduct of the English and Irish soldiers in the trenches was surprising. There those men stood behind shoulder-high mounds of dirt, facing level spaces of a death in front yet cracking jokes and singing snatches of music hall ballads between volleys. Stupendous bravery, I call it, or stupendous absence of nerves."

Sang Under Crushing Fire

"I've heard men under the crashing fire of the terrible German guns, and with comrades dropping all about them, unite in roaring 'It's a Long Road to Tipperary,' as if they were in barracks. Sometimes I'd hear a big Irishman call out to a neighbor in the trenches: 'Well, I winged that Dutchman, all right! The business of killing, with them, seemed to partake somewhat of a sporting event.'
"But how the Germans did pound that British line at Mons! They came on and on, and on, never stopping, never faltering. It was like the waves of a blue-gray sea rolling up through the fog. One wave would break and die away, but another would be right behind it, pushing on inexorably. The German commanders threw their men into the face of British fire with absolute recklessness, counting on the sheer weight of numbers to overwhelm us.
"To see through glasses those German lines move forward was like watching regiments of toy soldiers pushing across a table. You'd see a long row of blue blocks, topped with spiked helmets, break from cover and come rushing at you.
"When a British gun would speak, a shell would drop right in the midst of that blue block, a great hurling up of smoke and soil and the block would be gone, nothing left but a few little men madly running back through the haze of powder smoke.
"Retreat One Long Nightmare.
"But the German shells kept coming and coming. They are terrible, those shells. I've seen one shell enter a little hill and there explode, carrying away the whole top of the hill. I have seen a company of British wiped out by the explosion of a single shell.

"Perhaps the night fighting is the most weird and terrible to see. In this the forces of the Allies had the superiority through their preponderant supply of aeroplanes. The allied forces on the retreat from Mons to Senlis had thirty-four aeroplanes, which were busy day and night, but particularly at night.
"You would hear a whirring of invisible propellers overhead, and by straining your ears could trace the direction of the night flyer over the German positions. Gunners stand ready behind their pieces, keyed up to a wire pitch of efficiency.
"Suddenly a spark appears in the heavens; it falls. The airman has discovered a German battery and his falling torch makes the range and the position. Instantly the British guns roar and a shower of shells soars up to follow the line of that falling star.
"The retreat of the British from Mons to Senlis was one long nightmare. No sleep for any one; no rest from the harrying of the German guns and cavalry.
"Yet so stubborn was the spirit of the soldiers in the trenches that they rebelled against the order to retreat, falling to understand that the slow falling back in the face of the German advance was in connection with prearranged plans of the French and British.
"Sir John French even explained to some of the private soldiers the reason for his orders to retreat."

Battle News Favorable to The Allies

For three long days without cessation the Germans have hurled their masses against the French and English along the entire front in northern France. The French official view is that these operations, the fiercest that have yet taken place, are by high command, meaning possibly direct instructions from the emperor himself.

This purpose has been to break through the allied lines, but both French and British official reports say they have failed. From Paris it is announced that not only have the Germans not been able to achieve their object, but they have lost a flag, guns and men taken prisoners in the attempt.
"The British, as usual, are laconic. 'The situation is satisfactory,' they say, 'and the counter-attacks on the British front have been beaten back with heavy losses to the enemy.'"

The French claim appreciable progress on the left wing and a decisive victory over the famous Prussian Guard in the centre. Of the Woevre district, where the Germans have made gains in the last two or three days, little is said. One remarkable thing is this great battle, which has now entered upon its sixteenth day, is the spirit maintained by the troops.

In the Far East, according to Japanese reports, the Japanese have defeated the Germans on the outskirts of Tsing-Tau, capital of the German protectorate of Kiao-Chow. Though the battle lasted fourteen hours, the losses so far as known were small.

The German Emperor is now reported to be suffering from inflammation of the lungs. Only a day or two ago his fifth son, Prince Oscar, was obliged to withdraw from his regiment and is now being treated for a heart affection, the result of over-exertion in the field. The emperor's youngest son, Prince Joachim, has just recovered from a bullet wound.
From Petrograd comes an official statement from the Russian general staff that the German attempts in Russian Poland have been repulsed and that the Germans are in retreat.

Berlin, Sept. 27, via London, 9:10 p. m.—The total German casualties in dead, wounded and missing, as officially reported to date are 104,589. The casualty list announced today adds a total of 10,527 casualties to those previously announced.

WAR HITS NEW YORK WOMEN STENOGRAPHERS

Estimated That 5,000 Are Out of Work in New York

New York, Sept. 27.—"If the female stenographers in New York city now out of work paraded two by two up Broadway the line would reach from the Battery to a point near 42nd street," declared a representative of one of the big typewriter exchanges.
Some estimates place the number of stenographers who cannot get places, though they have hunted for months, at 5,000. Other estimates run as high as 7,000 to 8,000. Many of the young women, and, sad to relate, very many who no longer are on the sunny side of 40, are on the verge of starvation. Never before in the history of the epoch in the city's commercial history since the stenographer and typist entered the field has such a condition prevailed.

Two reasons are given. The first is the shutting down of importing and exporting houses and firms connected with the Wall street district. Another is the oversupply of stenographers turned out of schools, both public and private, in the last few years. Added to these two causes is the influx from the country. Thousands of young women who live with their folks and don't have to worry give up their jobs in June and have a good time at mountain and seashore, while the weather is propitious. In the fall they flood the town, looking for jobs and are competitors of their less fortunate sisters who have been seeking positions in vain all summer.

At the headquarters of one of the standard typewriters one day last week there were in the neighborhood of 500 applicants for jobs. About twenty-five were placed. At another there were at least 250 applicants. Of this number twenty-seven were placed. The number of applicants grows daily, while the number placed decreases. This condition is uniform in all the big agencies. Hundreds of stenographers have written to the agencies that they expect to lose their jobs in October and want to be considered on the waiting list.

The big typewriter companies are very careful in the matter of recommending stenographers. As one of the managers said "the winter garden variety needs' apply."
Most of the applicants are young, refined and well dressed.
