

ness. In his Aberdeen address he expresses the wish that there should be a Professorship of Fine Arts in every University, and that its functions should somehow be regularly connected with the Arts curriculum. We are happy to think that this is exactly what is being done, or in a fair way to be done, at Cambridge. The study of classical antiquity through classical art is there rapidly becoming a living and working branch of the general classical studies of the University. But this, some one will again say, is dreaming of the future. Are we satisfied with the present? Are we content that there should be University dignitaries who do not know one end of the solar spectrum from the other, and bishops who show their competence to criticize biological theories by supposing that the blood-corpuscles are formed by coagulation after death? We answer, unquestionably not. We hold that the elements of natural knowledge should be an integral part of general education. But we would make room for them—as we have already said on other occasions—not by ceasing to teach the Humanities, but by teaching them better.
