The lining over which the waist is made is fitted by double bust darts and the usual seams and closed at the center of the front. The full fronts, which join the back in shoulder and under-arm seams, are gathered along the shoulder edges, the fulness being drawn well forward by gathers at the bottom, and between the fronts appears a plastron that is sewed to position at the right side and secured with hooks and loops at the left side. The neck is completed with a standing collar overlaid with insertion and closed at the left side and about its lower edge is a ribbon that is softly knotted at the center of the front and stylishly bowed at the back. Two crosswise bands of insertion decorate the plastron below the collar and a band of similar insertion borders the frill caps, which stand out stylishly over the full puff sleeves. The puffs end some distance above the elbow and are arranged on coat-shaped sleeves that are decorated at the bottom of the puffs with a smooth band of insertion, and at the wrists with a band of insertion that is arranged in a triple box-plait at the outside of the arm. A wide, softly-wrinkled girdle having frill-finished ends closed at the center of the front is a stylish and becoming accessory.

The five-gored skirt is dartless and smooth at the top across the front and sides and ripples deeply below the hips; it is gathered at the back and flares broadly at the bottom, where it measures about four yards and three-quarters
