United States which governed their industrial relations by some form or other of employees' representation.

You will be interested to know that on this same Chicago trip I had a couple of talks with Mr. Curry, of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and found that up to that time the industrial plan of that corporation had worked with even better success than had been expected.

The troubles of the International Harvester Company have developed since I was in Chicago, and I have heard nothing more about them than what has appeared in the news dispatches.

Yours very truly,
