

They had no such monopoly. They had ~~believed~~ a particular to - an exclusive to between certain points, an exclusive to, - so they policy not one of strictly limiting to, but of developing it. In N. Holland there was no such adv.
The Eng East India Co. always took policy of steady development. It was in a way a monopoly, yet so far as its officials were concerned there was much opportunity for to so far as India was concerned. They did much to open up to within India. Dutch had never attempted this. It led up into many complications. The policies of 200. was slight. The best policy made for got immediate gain with it they did accumulate a mass of capital. At same time policy of new & continuous develop-opening up to in the interior & trying to increase corpses which could be sold in Europe.
You have ultimate secret of success of the Eng in Europe. The Eng. went for the expansion & development of to & ultimately they overtook the Dutch & established power in the
