he largest and wealthiest province of the entire Dominion of Canada is British Columbia. Even with its present importance, its natural resources are as yet only in the initial stages of development, and it has practically been dependent upon one railroad. Its climate is a priceless asset, and the eye is ever delighted by the unfolding of its matchless natural beauty. With an estimated area of 395,610 square miles, a rectangle about 700 miles long and 400 miles wide, it offers home room ideal for a nation. Tremendous forests of stately trees; massive mountains of mineral wealth; great valleys of fertile soil; immense rivers, beautiful lakes and numerous ocean bays, the breeding places of commercial fish food, all combine to offer the home-seeker in British Columbia a wide, varied and profitable means of livelihood.

Human instinct is to follow the lines of least resistance, and a desirable climate is always a consideration of importance, other advantages being equal. The climate of British Columbia presents as a whole all the conditions which are met with in European
