

three women, and five children, were seen and recognized. Mr. Williams was found lying on his back, about two paces from his tent door. He had apparently been intercepted in attempting to reach the horse, which had been tied up with twenty yards of him. There was a deep, shawl wound in his right chest, the seat being a large wound, probably inflicted by a bullet.

filled with great credit to himself, and proud of those who have been favored with his ministrations. In all his efforts to promote the interests of the cause of God, he has been ever ready to sacrifice a strong desire to glorify God in the conversion of souls.

By his side, in its most essential parts, and the embodiment of the plans and suggestions of Captain Cole, which have been fully described and discussed in the English journals and Reviewers during the last two years, and which, having been subjected to the test of severe experiment during the past year by the British Government, have been adopted by that Government in a more perfect form than the Monitor exhibits—the revolving turret presenting a sloping surface to the line of fire like the Merrimack.

Our Lord was explicit in his testimony concerning the driving law. He protested that the design of his coming was not to destroy but to fulfill it. He explained its spirituality, he confirmed its authority, and he placed man under the very strongest motives, keep all the commandments.

The Apostles, too, were careful to show that the law of God was not made void, but was established by the faith of the gospel. They proved, by a variety of arguments, that men should not continue in sin, under the supposition that grace would abound in delivering them from their guilt and punishment.

Without in the least disparaging the labors of those who differ from us on the subject of unconditional election, we must nevertheless hold it to be true that the Arminian view is the only one upon which consistently we can follow the example thus set before us. We rejoice to know that the doctrines of grace and a free salvation are "boldly proclaimed" by others, but by ourselves they are generally maintained and are shown much more prominently to involve the responsibility of every sinner for his own condemnation, and the obligation of every believer to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord.

What, then, might be allowed to ask, can so fairly exhibit "the doctrine of grace" as that theology which teaches that Christ died for all men, that therefore he is equally ready to save every man who believes the Gospel, and the privilege of every Christian to be sanctified through body, soul, and spirit, and so to remain blameless until the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ? This is free salvation—provided by infinite love for all, offered in good faith to all, and bestowed without money or price, without merit or good works, upon every one that believeth, whether Jew or Gentile.

That the Southern Confederacy, with the many officials who form connecting links in the lengthened chain of so-called rebellion, are gazing upon the rapidly transpiring events upon their continent with deliberation and courage, may, we think, be clearly traced in a manifesto lately circulated among the people of Georgia, over the names of members of the late Provisional government of that State, on the occasion of laying out their office. Evidences of Providential interposition and favor in their behalf are there enumerated; the formidable hosts arrayed against them, with their advantages, summed up; the prospect of foreign interference is regarded as questionable; the ruin of many cities and villages is anticipated. Yet in view of all this, there are energy, determination and courage calmly and most clearly expressed.

The War, and some of its Lessons.

It is impossible for us to watch with an indifferent eye the progress of the amazing struggle taking place in the neighboring States. We doubt whether anything just like it has been previously exhibited in the history of the world.

Arminianism Unexceptionably Evangelical.

The pious but eccentric Rowland Hill is reported, towards the close of his life, to have acknowledged that though, in his earlier years, he had thought and felt as the Arminian deity, yet, in his latter days, he had been led rather to fight the devil of Antinomianism.

Prospects of the South.

The authorities at Washington, we are inclined to believe, are assuming the office of superintending general over all Telegraphic intelligence which is destined for northern localities. The news so transmitted from time to time, carries inconsistency on the face of it.

Liverpool Circuit.

MR. EDITOR.—In taking a retrospective view of this Circuit, for the past year, many particulars present themselves, of a character both pleasing and painful. Lights and shades may be seen which are calculated to produce in the mind emotions of pleasure and of grief.

Methuen in Paris.

The incident narrated below, while a proof of the growth of Methodism in Paris, illustrates the regard which Napoleon has to appearances, in the erection of new buildings.
