CANADIAN BUTTER IN GREAT BRITAIN

Much disappointment was expressed over the decline in the shipments of Canadian butter, which had reached the point in 1905 where it was beginning to have a distinct place in the British market. If the quantity exported had shown an increase instead of a decline, if the shipments had even been maintained at the level of 1903-5, the demand for our butter should have shown considerable improvements. As it is now with the insignificant amount shipped in 1908, nobody is taking much interest in it.

A marked feature of the butter trade of the United Kingdom in 1908 was the large increase in the shipments from Australia and Siberia, the supplies from both countries having exceeded those in all previous years. The quantity of Irish creamery continues to increase and to improve in quality, but as it is a home production, the figures do not appear in the Trade and Navigation tables. The importance and volume of the Irish supply is therefore often overlooked. The total value of the Irish butter shipped annually to England and Scotland is variously estimated at from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000. About two-thirds of the whole quantity is made in creameries. There are now nearly 900 creameries in Ireland.

THE CARE OF HARNESS

No chain is stronger than its weakest link, and a worn spot under a buckle, or a faulty spot in a trace, may hold the lives of more than one suspended in mid-air. It is impossible to give too much care, too much consideration, to the harness behind which we sit.

The one great desideratum is that harness must be kept dry. Not hot, remember; simply dry. The idea of having a few random hooks on the stable wall and throwing the harness from the horse to the hooks is ridiculous.

The cases should be supplied with proper fittings, the right saddle trees, bridle and headpiece, and collar hooks, etc., and these cost practically nothing, while the desirability of keeping a saddle or a collar in shape, or a crupper from being distorted—to the discomfort of the animal wearing it—must surely be obvious at the mere mention of the fact. All reins should be trained to hang perfectly straight, this being insured by "handling." After cleaning, they should always be lightly stretched and then put away.

Anyone can buy expensive harness with money; the "horseman" is known by the condition of his harness in, not by the bill for its cost. All metal work should be carefully cleaned, using guard cloths to prevent scratches and the accumulation of "composition" or dust under the edges, while all residue should be perfectly brushed out of all design-work or trifling ornamentation, which high-class harness carries very sparingly indeed. The buckle itself should move easily in its sheath, which should also be supple and not simply a dry tube, liable to crack and break when the crucial test of the maximum strain comes along.

This is the day of patent leather finish, as against the old-time sole leather, and this means a tremendous decrease in the work of cleaning a set of harness, and keeping it up to the mark. Varnish should never be used, except on very old harness, for it takes the heart out of the leather and kills it. Good harness badly kept, and hung in a hot room, can be killed in six months, and yet, on the surface look, to the inexperienced eye, as though it were as fresh as when new from the manufacturer.

When simply cleaning the harness, it should be hung at a suitable height, brushed over to dislodge dust or caked dirt, the stitching and loops, and under and around the buckles receiving close attention, and this should be followed by a soft cloth, always well shaken from time to time. The harness should then be "gone over," passing each part through the hands, limbering it as it goes, insuring perfect inspection, and giving special attention to any spot needing it. Then some of the standard "compositions" may be lightly applied, according to directions, the stuff well rubbed in,
