Boswell's House on the Market

CHORDING to the New York Times, the Mansion House of Auchinleck, of which James Boswell was once the aird, in Ayrahire, Scotland, which he vainly sought to represent in Parliament, is on the market. Here is a chance for some fortunate Boswellian to settle himself congenially, if he be not afraid of income tax and death duties, in Boxxy's old home, which he so loved to be away from. It is Burns' county, too, and doubt-less still rich in "whisky, soul of quips and cranks," whose unpermitted flow surely the devotees of Jemmy

Bossy's father wanted him to marry and to whom the wolatile youn man made love in person and by deputy. Bossy sighed and adored and quarrelled with his "dear infidel." He dressed in green and gold. He even played his part with "Spanish stateliness." He squeezed and kissed "her fine hand while she looked at me with those beautiful black eyes." "her fine hand while she looked as me with those beautiful black ayes."
Does she have any particular liking for him? No. "I like many people as well as you. I like Jeany Maxwell better than you," says the frank lady. Sir Alexander Gilmour is the favorite. Boxxy laughs off his disappointment, and writes a ballad:

She told me with a scornful-look, I was as ugly as a tawney; For she a better fish could hook, The rich and gallant knight, Sie Sawney.

Dear old Bossy, Bossy ever fresh and young! Most un-Scotch of Scottishmen, one of the most mixed of men; unconventional conventionalist; a Tery prop of state and church, who loved to lienic on the coast of Bohemia; amorist, scholar, buffoon; sentimentalist and cynic, sentence and sordid; affected and candid, vain and an analyzer of his own vanity; collector of celebrities, sycophant of senius! He wanted a high place at the bar and in politics, and he won immortality by his "gust for London" and his frequentation of Johnson. Most sociable of men, a good fellow, though not without traits of Rousseau. The Mansion House of Auchipleck ought to be a national moment, but money is scarce over on the other side.

Mrs. Will Crooks, wife of the labor leader in the British House of Commons, is active in a propagation for reducing the drudgery of house-surf. Appropriate the drudgery of house-surf. Appropriate this, she said recently 'mail the talk as her shout morter hours of labor one might easily imagine that the world consisted of men only, or at least that women's hours are already so short the any relexation for them was of me moment whatever. The facts are are actedy the opposite. Not only the number of women exceed the number of women exceed into finite as the number and character of her household duties. Tous of household of mothers have next in the lossifier at his, and their work is insecting, worrying, trying, as a second control of the constitution, the control of the constitution of the constitu Mrs. Crooks.

SWITCH on the light in the livingroom! Mother, YOU get ready the programme! We'll sit around to-night and have a real two hours' concert. All by ourselves! We'll start in the regular way with an overture. Then we'll have one of those new dances. After that we'll ALL join in, and sing two or three of the liveliest "rags" we've got. We'll play that rattling march that Jack's so keen about, and finish with Mary's favorite—"The Swing Song."

Come on! Are you ready? Let's start!

Come on! Are you ready? Let's start!
Who'll do the playing?
Why, THERE'S dad at the piano—Jack and Mary perched at either side of him.
Never had a lesson in his life, can't read a note of music—but, say, doesn't he play like a regular Paderewski?
Watch him swing with the rhythm. See how keen he is about the expression—gets every little shade into it! Oh, he's proud, playing!

Hear how easily and spontaneously he interprets every emotion—laughter or tears, care-free jollity or sighing sorrow. Truly, no ordinary "player" is this Gerhard Heintzman Player-Pjano.

Dad himself says it's the best investment of his lifetime! Brings recreation, brain rest, inspiration. He's PROUD to own it!

And mother thinks it's a fine education for the youngsters—gives them a true and wonderful appreciation of music. Let us bring the gladness and inspiring goodness of MUSIC into your home. We'll gladly demonstrate the Gerhard Heintzman Player-Piano to you. You'll be surprised that an instrument so good, bringing a lifetime's happiness, costs so little, can be bought so easily.

Sharp's Ballet was the old standby—the seliable family remedy—of our grand-permis, and it is equally shadow to day.
