Which Was The Heir?

CHAPTER XXXVII. (Concluded.)

He wandered about Brighton for the remainder of the day, and at night he found himself, without any conscious volition on his part, standing beneath her window, and Cottie, from an uplifted corner of his blind, looked down and saw him.

She slept little that night, for the flame of love was burning fiercely in her young heart, torturing her with pain one moment, and consuming her with unspasmodic joy the next.

They met again the next day, and the next; indeed, when he was not calling at the house he was scheming meetings with her, and once or twice he contrived to walk with her; in a vague kind of way her presence, her nearness, brought back the pleasure which he had experienced in Ronnie's society. Now, of course, neither Mrs. Sefton nor Cottie were blind to his attentions.

'I don't understand it,' my dear,' said the elder lady. 'He follows you about like a shadow; he is more devoted than all the other men. You must be mistaken about the lady at Starborough.'

'I saw him with my own eyes,' said Cottie in a low voice, and struggling with a sigh.

That evening he dined with them again. They were alone, and Mrs. Sefton saw that he could not take his eyes from Cottie. The love spoke not only in his eyes but in his voice. 'Mrs. Sefton spoke to him he listened with an absent-minded politeness; but at the slightest word of Cottie's he turned to her with a rapt eagerness. It was a lovely night, with a nearly full moon, and when he was going, Cottie exclaimed on his beauty.

'It is a shame to go to bed,' she said.

He turned to her eagerly, crushing his cap in his hand.

'I suppose you—and Mrs. Sefton—wouldn't care to come for a short walk? It would be beautiful up on the cliff.'

Cottie evaded his eyes and glanced at Mrs. Sefton, who shrugged her shoulders with a resigned air.

'If you'll promise not to go far,' she said.

The maid brought the ladies a couple of fleecy shawls, and the three set out. When they had gone a little distance Mrs. Sefton sank on to a convenient seat, declaring that she could not walk any farther.

'But you can go on just a little way, my dear,' she said to Cottie.

Cottie shot a reproachful glance at her, which Mrs. Sefton pretended not to see; but she did not decline, and she and Geoffrey walked on. They sauntered along almost in silence—Geoffrey wondering whether she could hear his heart beating, and she wondering whether he could hear hers—and

Twitching of the Nerves

Wonderful cure brought about by DR. A. W. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

It is only by watching the symptoms of nervous exhaustion and applying restorative treatment that you can ever hope to ward off locomotor ataxia and paralysis.

Mrs. E. J. Vanderburgh, of Eastern Wolland Ave., St. Catharines, Ont., states:—'For twenty-one years I was badly afflicted with heart trouble, nervousness and cramps in the limbs, also twitching of the nerves and nervous headaches. I became weak, debilitated and emaciated. My condition was distressing and I was made worse through worry and loss of sleep.

'I tried a hundred remedies in vain. After having used half a dozen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food my old trouble had entirely vanished, and I was enjoying better health than I had since girlhood.'

Such cases as this prove the wonderful efficiency of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. It cures in Nature's way by enriching the blood and for this reason enriching the blood and its benefits are lasting. 50 cts. a box, all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

presently they came to a seat on the cliff overlooking the sea.

'Shall we sit down for a minute or two?' asked Geoffrey, almost gruffly; and Cottie, looking down to see that Mrs. Sefton was within reach if she should be needed as a refuge, after a moment's hesitation, complied. But still Geoffrey seemed spell-bound; and, in desperation, Cottie at last said,

'I suppose you'll be going back to Australia soon, in search of your boy-partner, Mr. Bell?'

Geoffrey almost started, for in this charmed presence he had actually forgotten Ronnie.

'Yes—I suppose so,' he assented in a low voice. 'What makes you think he has gone there?'

'Oh, I don't know,' replied Cottie, rather alarmed. As he seemed so fond of you, I thought perhaps he might have gone back to join you.'

'Yes, I thought so,' said Geoffrey, musingly, 'and I have once or twice lately thought of starting; but something has kept me back.'

He took off his cap and passed his hand across his brow, half-rose, and then fell back. Was the something Eva Rasleigh? Cottie thought. Of course, it must be.

'It must be something of importance, as you are so anxious to find him,' she said, with affected indifference.

He looked at her. The moon was shining full upon her face—the face that was so Ronnie's—and its beauty stirred him to his depths. He began to tremble.

'Yes it is,' he said, huskily. 'I wonder whether you'd be angry if I told you. I want to tell you very much, but I feel that I dare not, ought not to do so.'

BOVRIL is the true economist in the Kitchen.

'Is it so very dreadful?' she asked, with affected levity; but she drew the shawl partly across her face as if she felt the night air.

'It is very dreadful for me, Miss Sefton,' he said. 'Dreadful for many reasons. Oh, I must tell you—I feel as if I must speak; though I know it's no use, though I'm afraid you'll think I'm insulting you.'

She stopped abruptly and in alarm; but Geoffrey was too agitated to notice the words which had almost given her away.

'See here,' he said, almost abruptly, 'Mrs. Sefton—you—have both been kind to me, have both received me as if I were an equal. Oh, you have been kinder than you can think; and I am ashamed! For, Miss Sefton, I am not worthy of your kindness—I—yes, I will tell you everything now I have begun. In the first place I am not a gentleman.'

Cottie turned her beautiful eyes upon his pale anxious face with an incredulous smile. Geoffrey not a gentleman! To her he was the first gentleman in the land, the king of men.

'No,' he said, 'I have no claim to the title; I can scarcely claim to be a man, for—his voice broke and grew almost inaudible — 'I have no name.'

'No name!' murmured Cottie. 'No, he said, doggedly. 'My father was not married; I am illegitimate. Oh, don't you understand?'

She saw the great drops of sweat standing on his brow, saw his hands grip each other.

'That's enough to set me apart from all the rest of the world. And I'm poor, of no account, as well. In fact I am a nameless vagabond, and yet, with all this against me, I have been mad enough—yes, mad enough—to fall in love with the loveliest, the sweetest girl—'

His voice broke again, and he was silent.

Cottie's heart throbbed with pain and dread. 'Was he going to speak of Eva Rasleigh?'

'Now you know the truth,' he said after a pause, during which the boom of the sea rang thickly in her ears, so that his voice seemed to come from a distance. 'Don't you think I ought to be ashamed of myself for coming into decent society, for daring to fall in love? I love! He echoed with self-scorn. 'There can be no such thing, no such happiness for such as I am.'

'But why?' said Cottie, almost inaudibly. 'It—it is no fault of yours. If you told her, and she—she cared for you, she would not mind—at least I think—'

He looked at her in a whirl of amazement, of tremulous hope of incredulity.

'I have told her,' he said.

Cottie was sure he meant Eva, and she rose; but Geoffrey caught her arm.

A BROKEN-DOWN SYSTEM. This is a condition of disease to which doctors give many names, but which few of them really understand. It is simply weakness—a broken-down system of the vital forces that sustain the system. No matter what may be the cause (they are almost numberless), the symptoms are the same: the more prominent being depression, loss of energy for all the old and new affairs of life. Now, what alone is absolutely essential in all such cases is increased vitality—vigour.

VITAL STRENGTH & ENERGY to those of these morbid feelings, and restores vitality as night succeeds the day this may be more certainly secured by a course of the celebrated life-restoring tonic.

THERAPION No. 3 than by any other known combination. So surely as it is taken in accordance with the directions accompanying it, with the shattered health be restored.

THE EXPIRING LAMP OF LIFE LIGHTED UP AFRESH. and a new existence imparted in place of what had so lately seemed worn-out, "used up," and valueless. This wonderful medicine is purely vegetable and innocuous, is agreeable to the taste, suitable for all constitutions and conditions, in either sex; and it is difficult to imagine a case of disease or derangement, whether of the nervous system or of the digestive organs, which will not be speedily and permanently benefited by this life-restoring tonic. It is a tonic, which is destined to cast into oblivion everything that had preceded it, for this wide-spread and numerous disease.

THERAPION is sold by Chemists throughout the world. Price in England, 1/6 and 4/6. Purchasers should note that the word "THERAPION" appears on the bottle. Government Stamp in white letters on a red ground affixed to every package is the mark of the Hon. Commissioners and without which it is a forgery.

THERAPION may now also be obtained in Dragee (Tasteless) form.

A Note of Appreciation

Editor Evening Telegram:

Dear Sir:—The Reid Nfld. Co's. general and popular agent at Kelligrews, Mr. H. T. Watts, has tendered his resignation, and the office which he occupied for the last two years is being transferred to another to-day, and we take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of the courtesy, kindness and attention to duty which has characterized his behaviour since first talking charge of this station.

When our names are blotted out and our place know us no more the memory of each kind service will remain. These words can in a sense be fitly applied to Mr. Watts, for it is safe to assert that never was this station conducted by a more obliging official, or one who gave such universal satisfaction to the public which his duties brought him in daily contact with. Being the happy possessor of a very bright and genial disposition which made it a pleasure to do business with him, and which coupled with faithfulness and ability raised him in the estimation of his employers as well as the public.

The people of this Shore learn with regret of his intention to leave his native land to seek his fortune in the great West of Canada.

Mr. Watts is a native of Briggs, that little town which has raised and sent forth so many sons to prove a credit to their native town and country in varied walks, and we do not hesitate to bespeak for Harry an upper wrung in the ladder of success in the world of telegraphy and railroading.

He has been fortunate in securing a very remunerative position as telegrapher with the C.P. Railway at Winnipeg, and will be leaving for that city during this week.

It seems a regrettable circumstance that inadequate remuneration should be responsible for depriving Newfoundland of those who become qualified and fitted to take part in their growing commercial activities. May we hope for better days to come.

As a token of the esteem in which Mr. Watts is held he has already been the recipient of some valuable presents including a beautiful watch chain and pipe.

In conclusion we wish him success in his new field and a safe return at some future day to old Terra Nova.

As we pray for your success in the City out West.
