War Brevities.

VOLUNTEER COLLIERIES.

When the British cruiser Suffolk arrived at Halifax, Nova Scotia, her entry into the harbour caused great excitement, says the New York correspondent of the Central News.

Coaling operations began immediately, 200 men of the 63rd Regiment having volunteered to carry coal so that the cruiser's tars might have a well-earned afternoon off.

FIFTY JOURNALS STOPPED.

"Since the war began nearly fifty papers devoted to the interests of trades and sports have suspended publication," says the Mail. "In most cases, the circulation was not extensive, but taken in the aggregate the suspension means a considerable loss of employment."

Some of the journals will revive on the return of better times, but in the case of others they have, it is feared, been "put to bed" (in printing office phrase) for the last time.

A GREAT VICTORY.

"A Swedish actress was taken for a German spy in Paris, and not knowing how to proclaim her identity, and being surrounded by a shouting mob, felt alarmed."

"Suddenly a lucky idea occurred to her. She slightly raised her skirt, and, showing a dainty little foot, exclaimed, 'You look at this. Do you call this German.' She was saved and carried in triumph to her hotel," says the Stockholm correspondent of the Telegraph.

"Christians 'Like The Huns,' as well."

"Almighty and meet the foe you merciful God, will defeat him. Lead us to victory, and give us grace that we may show ourselves to be faithful to your hands be at your mercy. Gain a reputation like the Kaiser has ordered to be included in the Liturgy at all public services, August, 1914."

BUT YOURS ARE GOOD.

"At his last interview with the Russian military authorities before the war Prince Hohenzollern, the Austrian Military Attaché, expressed surprise that the Russians should be requisitioning so many automobiles," says the Times St. Petersburg correspondent.

"Your roads are too bad," he remarked.

"But yours are good," was the response.

"Both sides apparently are making excellent use of motor-cars, thanks to good roads for transport, and this may explain the rapid alteration on the frontier of engagements during the last few days which are otherwise somewhat confusing."

A SENTINEL'S SWOON.

"A Belgian sentinel in Northern Brabant was guarding a bridge when he suddenly perceived less than a hundred yards away two mounted Uhlans," says the Press Association.

"With perfect calmness the sentinel immediately took careful aim, and with three shots from his rifle emptied both saddles. He then ran forward to take possession of the two horses."

"Some peasants had witnessed the incident, and when after a few minutes the soldier did not return they plucked up their courage and went to investigate. What was their surprise to find the sentinel lying in a swoon beside the dead bodies of the two Uhlans. Once the danger had passed the plucky chap had no longer been able to keep control of his nerves and had fainted."

HEROISM OF BELGIAN LIEGE COMMANDER.

"One of the forts of Liege which held back the German invaders of Belgium with such heroic fortitude has at last fallen. But it has not been destroyed by German guns, nor will the German eagle fly above it as a symbol of victory," says Mr. Philip Gibbs in the Chronicle.

"Commanded by Major Mameche, the fort of Chaudfontaine covered the railway line between Aix-la-Chapelle and Liege, by way of Verviers and the tunnel of Chaudfontaine. It was therefore of enormous importance to the Germans, and had been under continual fire since the enemy came to Liege."

"When resistance was no longer possible, Major Mameche barred up the tunnel by colliding a number of engines, and afterwards set fire to the mass."

"His mission was then at an end, and, determined that the Germans should not take possession of his little stronghold, he lighted a fuse to the powder magazine and blew up the fort."

"It is an act of heroism which will not be forgotten in the history of Belgium."

The Steamboat.

By GEORGE FITCH,

Author of "At Good Old St. John's." The steamboat is an engine on a raft with $11,000 worth of jigsaw work around it.

Steamships are built of steel and are severely plain except on the inside where the millionaire tourist is confined. Steamboats are built of wood, tin, shingles, canvas and twine, and look like a bundle of hay. If a steamboat should go into sea, the ocean would take one playful slap at it and people would be picking up kirdling on the beach for the next eleven years.

However, the steamboat does not go to sea. Its home is on the river, which does not rise up and stand on end in a storm. It is necessary that the steamboat shall be light and airy because if it were heavy it would stick into the bottom of the river several feet and become an island instead of a means of transportation.

The steamboat is, from 100 to 300 feet long and from 50 to 60 feet wide. It is from 40 to 70 feet high above water, but it does not extend more than three feet into the water. This is because that is all the water there is. A steamboat must be so built that when the river is low and the sand bars come out for air the first mate can tap a keg of beer and run the boat four miles on the sands.

Steamboats were once the beasts of burden for the great Middle West and the city which could not be reached by low water by a steamboat with two large, hot stacks, 25 negro rousters on the bow end and a gambler in the cabin, withered away and died in infancy. But the railroad, which runs in high water or low and does not stab itself in a vital spot with a snag, came along and cleared the steamboat out of business. There are only a few left now, which is a great pity, for the most decorative part of a great river is a tall, white steamboat with a chime whistle and a flashing wheel in the far foreground.

Steamboats would still prosper if steamboat men would go to school and learn how to collect freight and how to load and deliver it without depending on the umbrageous and dilatory rouster. A course in a good cooking school would also produce a grateful change in steamboat travel. The government has spent a hundred millions improving the rivers but the steamboat hasn't improved in fifty years.

Fashionable evening wraps will be made of supple black velvet with collars of white fox, ermine, chinchilla, mole skin or skunk.

There are dainty slipper buckles in square or oval shapes made of the thickest flowers, in colors to harmonize with the gown.

Some of the new coats are made on the lines of a basque, being snugly fitted and buttoned down the front and joined below the hips to a long Russian tunic.

"TOMMY."

I went into a public-house to get a pint o' beer. The publican 'e up an' sez, 'We serve no redcoats here.' The girls behind the bar they laughed an' giggled fit to die. I outs into the street again, an' to myself sez I: O it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy go away.' But it's 'Thank you, Mister Atkins,' when the band begins to play. The band begins to play, my boys, the band begins to play. O it's 'Thank you, Mister Atkins,' when the band begins to play.

I went into a theatre as sober as could be. They give a drunk civilian room, but 'adn't none for me; We'll wait for entry ration if you treat us rational; But when it comes to fightin', Lord! they'll shove me in the stalls. For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy, wait outside; Why, single men in barracks don't grow into plaster saints. The troopship's on the tide, my boys, the troopship's on the tide. But it's 'Special train for Atkins,' when the troopship's on the tide.

O makin' mock o' uniforms that guard you while you sleep Is cheaper than them uniforms, an' they're starvation cheap; An' hustlin' drunken sodgers when they're goin' large a bit Is five times better business than paradin' in full kit. Then it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy, 'ow's yer soul?' But it's 'Thin red lines o' 'eroes' when the drums begin to roll. The drums begin to roll, my boys, the drums begin to roll. But it's 'Thin red lines o' 'eroes' when the drums begin to roll.

We arn't no thin red 'eroes, nor we arn't no blackguards too, But single men in barracks, most remarkable like you; An' if sometimes our conduct isn't all your fancy paints, Why, single men in barracks don't grow into plaster saints. But it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy, tall behind; But it's 'Please to walk in front, sir,' when there's trouble in the [wind]. There's trouble in the wind, my boys, there's trouble in the wind. But it's 'Please to walk in front, sir,' when there's trouble in the [wind]. You talk o' better food for us, an' schools, an' fires, an' all; We'll wait for entry ration if you treat us rational; Don't mess about the cook-room slops, but prove it to our face The Widow's uniform is not the soldier-man's disgrace. For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Chuck him out, the brute!' But it's 'Saviour of 'is country' when the guns begins to shoot; An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please; An' Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool—you bet that Tommy sees! —Kipling.

FADS AND FASHIONS.

A few of the tailored costumes are fashioned of rather large checked black and white materials. There are beautiful scarfs in silk or wool that offer most pleasing substitutes for fur neckpieces. There is a great diversity in the sizes of hats. They are worn from the smallest to the largest.

Broadcloth and velvet will be combined and trimmed with bands of fur of the short-haired variety. Two-faced capes of black and white satin, which may be worn either side out, are shown for evening wear. New bandeaus have hairpin attachments. They are of shell set with rhinestones, solid and open work designs.

The very latest hats have transparent brims of wide lace and tulle wired into shape and transparent crowns. The broad girle of black satin embroidered with gold is a pleasing addition to afternoon and evening dresses.

The new skirts are very full from waist line to ankle, and they have little underskirts which are much lighter. Fall dresses for young girls frequently have straight coat backs and satin sleeves.
