In he face of this our Allies have struck again on the old battleground, familiar from two years of thanic struggle of the Trentino If they have struck with any force and intend to go on striking there, the news is nost surprising. Trent was among the first, and will always be one of the chief, objectives of Italy, but Austria's overwhelming attack last year left her a long distance from it, and that the attempt has been renewed now is, to say the least, significant. There are two possible explanations. One is that the blow is intended as a strong diversion from the major operations against Trieste, which will be resumed in force if the diverit is most encouraging. It must be remembered that the tactics of the Allies are all thoroughly co-ordinated, and that Paris and London are as well apprised of what goes on in Itand that Paris and London are as aly, and as much responsible for it as Rome is. The new offensive would then have two meanings, first that the French and British in France We borrow the above have weakened the Central Powers striking title from the far more than is apparent to the lay New York "Times," as observer; second, that the return of
