The Real Cause.

The gentleman who declared, "We have now a state of affairs in which the rich wish to spend more and save less, and the poor wish to spend more and work less," was putting his something to give?

Can you answer them "no," when the but MINARD'S, and we can reunrest in a way that but few have the courage to dare. It is one and the same thing, really, whether it is the rich who refuse to save adeadcuately or the poor who insist that it is their privilege to work less, because it means that neither class has grasped the rationale of present-day existence. When will it be appreciated that work is a man's privilege and not his burden, and that happiness consists, not in flagrant.

Will the Human Race Die Out?

From the recorded facts extending over nearly three centuries, it is found that in 1610 the average height of a man in Europe was 1.75 metres, or, say, five feet nine inches, while in 1790 it was only five feet six inches, says Spare Moments. In 1820 it was five feet five inches and a fraction. It is easy to deduce from easy enough to say "no," when you're asked to carry a little bit cline in human states. cline in human stature, and to apply this, working backwards and forwards, to the past and to the future. By this calculation it is determined that the stature of the first man attained the surprising average of six feet nine inches. Truly, there were giants on the earth in those days. The race had already deteriorated in the days of Og, and Goliath more or less, .

If the man that's worth while is the man of affairs who isn't afraid to say "yes."

iorated in the days of Og, and Goliath was quite a degenerate offspring of the giants. Coming down to later times, we find that, at the beginning times, we find that, at the beginning of our era, the average height of man was nine feet; and, in the time of Charlemagne, it was eight feet eight inches. But the most astonishing result of this scientific study comes from the application of the same inexorable law of diminution to the future. The life with some useful service to calculation shows that by the year 4000 A.D. the stature of the average man will be reduced to fifteen inches. At that epoch there will be

Had to Keep Him Going.

The wife of a military man advertised for a girl to do general housework. The notice was responded to by a particularly neat and competent young colored woman. The details were soon settled-number in the family, hours for meals, days out, no laundry, how often the drawing-room can't afford to pay such wages." "That's too bad," replied the maid. "But, ye' see, mah husband he's a lieutenant, too, and Ah mus' have that much to keep him going."
