TALK ABOUT AN EGG WITHOUT SALT!

Three poor little children whom I know have never had a real Christmas. No, this is not going to be an appeal to your purse, only to your sympathies. These children do not belong to any poverty stricken family. They have plenty of toys each, so many that they hardly know what to do with them. So many that they get cross and excited and quarrel over them before Christmas Day is over.

Those Selfish Parents! But these three children live in a home where the selfish parents keep the joy of giving for themselves, so the children do not have the joy of the excitement and the blessing of giving as well as receiving. That is why I say that they have not had a real Christmas. For a Christmas when you receive but do not give, is only half a Christmas, at best. And this applies to children as well as grown-ups.

How often when the children begin to give gifts, that means extra bother, and perhaps extra expense, for the parents. It means that they will have to give ways for the children to have money; that they will have to have small fingers at their task of real knife. Don't I think Junior will love it? She paid 25 cents extra to get that kind. And as a climax she opens the bureau drawer where her masterpiece reposes, a night gown she is making for mother!

Junior next claims my attention and leads me up into the attic where he has hidden away the wonderful smoking stand he has made for father at the sloyd class. And then he describes a work box quite as wonderful for mother which he is still at work upon.

Even little sister has her small purchases and a string of beads she made at school to show me.

Anticipation pervades the house. Secrets are everywhere. And the children are in them not on the outside.

Don't withhold the best of Christmas from the children. Let them begin young even if it shatters the faith in Santa Claus as a reality instead of a pretty fairy story. What they gain is more than what they lose.

Those Thrilling Secrets. Sister is making sachets for all the aunts and consults me as to whether I think Aunt Ann would like a pink sachet or a yellow one best. Then she shows me the pencil box she has bought for little sister and the knife for Junior. It has that special attachment with which to take stones out of horses' feet, so indispensable to a Household Notes.

As a first course to a formal dinner serve a ring of thin slices of seedless oranges around a mound of powdered sugar. Garnish with bits of angelica.

To prevent your costume slip from hanging below your dress when you raise your arms, sew snap-fasteners to the under-arm seams of the dress and slip.

To prevent runners in baby's stockings, sew loops of wide tape to them, then run the safety pins through the loops when pinning them to the diapers.

WATER STREET.

THE LANDLORD.

The landlord is a genial gent, a man of charm and grace; and when he asks you for the rent a smile adorns his face; 'twould grieve him much if it is content should in your heart have place. He's seen his tenants bilked, and say when he comes to the door; he fain would see you romp and play about your cottage floor; and yet the coin he bears away will come to you no more. The landlord used to seek my shack as each new month appeared, and merry quip and cheerful crack he filtered through his beard; and yet he made my skates seem black, his footfall much I feared. The coin he took I used to need to buy things at the store, to buy a helpful book to read, a couch on which to moan; he took away my chickenfeed, and it came back no more. The landlord came to get the price with manners most benign; alas, his bearing out no foe, nor did his greeting fine; I bought his shanty twice or thrice, and then it wasn't mine. At last I built myself a hut, hard by the village pound, and when at eve the doors are shut, there happiness is found; it is a humble dwelling but no landlord comes around. To other doors the landlord goes, to bone men for the rent, and vain and empty quips he throws, with wit and humor blent; but from my treasure chest he knows he'll never draw a cent.

Toasted cheese strips are nice served with a fruit salad. Use thin slices of cheese between buttered slices of white bread, cutting into inch-wide strips. Children love cinnamon sandwiches. Make them of thin slices of graham bread, buttered and sprinkled with a little sugar and cinnamon. Cut into fancy shapes.
