

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

IS IT THE WOMAN'S FAULT?

A Letter Friend puts up a neighbor's problem to me. (At least she says it is a neighbor's problem.)

"What do you think of a man who is not true to his wife, who confesses that he hasn't been, but explains that it was because she was so wrapped up in the children that she didn't pay enough attention to him and he got interested in a woman who did. He says that that happens with lots of men, and that it is the woman's fault. What do you think?"

What a very familiar ring there is to the sentence before the last!

What was it great-great-great-grandfather Adam said about Eve and the apple?

Is it the woman's fault? What do I think?

When Eve Stuffed the Apple Down His Throat.

Was it Adam's fault when Eve (to hear him tell it) hit him over the head, knocked him unconscious and stuffed the apple down his throat?

It seems to me that the man who says that he got interested in other women because his wife was too interested in the children is doing some tall protective thinking.

I suspect that he discovered that cause after the event took place; perhaps when he had gotten over the whole thing, was sick of it, saw himself more as he would appear to others and just had to have some justification to make him appear better in his own eyes—or if others knew about it, in theirs.

If He Wants His Own Respect.

Would it be a justification for a woman to be untrue to her husband because he stayed down town every day earning the children's living, and even now and then had to work evenings?

Hardly. And there often comes a time in married life when the woman's hours as guardian of the young are longer and more arduous than her husband's as provider of food and shelter. It seems to me that any decent reasonable man who means to be a good citizen and deserve his own respect would realize that, and while he might yield to temptation would not try to justify himself by that. I think I could forgive the yielding better than the justification (but perhaps not if I were his wife).

But That Does Not Excuse the Man.

Of course there are women whose devotion to their children and neglect of their husbands is more than necessary or reasonable (just as there are men whose devotion to their business is abnormal). One does not wonder that the husbands of such women get resentful and inclined to think, "What difference does it make?" Women like that are foolish, but even so I do not think that justifies the revenge that men too often take, and I think any really self-respecting man will work out his problem some other way.

Well, we left dear Uncle Lucky sound asleep in his old armchair in the last story, didn't we? On and on he slept, for he was very tired, so by and by Little Miss Mouse called up Lady Love and told her not to expect him.

"Uncle Lucky won't be over this evening. He's sound asleep in his old armchair," said Lady Love to her bunny boy, and hopping over to the window, she looked up at the Twinkle Twinkle Star. All of a sudden Old Hooty Tooty Owl gave a mournful cry, and the next moment he sailed silently over the bramble tops.

"Dear, dear!" sighed the little rabbit's mother, "I hope Timmie Meadowmouse is on the lookout. Little mice must be very careful."

Just then from the Shady Forest a katydid began to rub together the two drum-heads on his wings. Three rubs at a time, sounding just like "Katy did, Katy did, Katy did." Then only two rubs, "She did! She didn't." Then again three rubs, "Yes, she did! No, she didn't."

In a few minutes from all the neighboring trees the katydids, one after another, began to sing, until the whole tribe filled the air with their music.

"I could stop them," said the little rabbit, hopping up to Lady Love, who was now sitting in the rocking chair, darning one of his socks.

"How?" asked his pretty bunny mother, with a smile.

"Just thump on the tree on which Katydid is sitting," answered the little rabbit; and out he hopped toward the Big Elm Tree from which a katydid was sending forth his drumming sounds. But, goodness me! Even before the bunny boy reached the tree, very quiet indeed. He folded his long green wings close to his body and clung tightly to his twig as down the evening breeze came a strange sound. "Peent! Peent!" That told all the little people of the Shady Forest that Neddle Nighthawk was near. The next minute with two or three quick beats of his wings, he dropped right among the trees close to Mr. Katydid. With a quick turn, this old nightbird again mounded into the air, and so suddenly that the wind rushing through his wing-feathers, made a roaring noise.

"Oh, dear me!" cried the little rabbit, hopping quickly back to the dear Old Bramble Patch. "I hope that old bird won't catch Mr. Katydid. I like to hear him sing. 'Katy did, Katy did.' No, she didn't, yes, she did," and the next minute the bunny boy was safe within the little white bungalow.

"What's the matter?" asked Lady Love, his pretty rabbit mother, looking up from her darning.

"What's the matter?" asked Lady Love, his pretty rabbit mother, looking up from her darning.

"Neddle Nighthawk is about," answered the little bunny. "I guess Mr. Katydid heard him, for he stopped singing before I had the chance to thump on the Big Chestnut Tree."

"Home's the safest place to stay. After you have played all day."

sang the tiny Cuckoo Bird from the porch of her little clock house on the wall. And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

Screen Version of "Babbitt"

LIVING PICTURE OF PROBLEM COMMON TO ALL PEOPLE.

America is made up of millions of "Babbitts." They are the backbone of the country; the practical schemers of commercial progress and civic development.

The home of a "Babbitt" is the middle-class home half the presidents, judges, artists and literati have come from, and it is no less a photoplay than the Warner Bros. latest picture, "Babbitt," as adapted from the great Sinclair Lewis novel of the same name, that will be shown at the Nickel Theatre, Monday.

Against a background of days that follow each other in a gray procession of drab, petty routine, Geo. F. Babbitt finds his wife and family a constant source of irritation, and his life a wearying burden that threatens to kill his soul.

The role of "Babbitt," as portrayed by Willard Louis on the screen, is a living picture of the problem common to all of us. Has romance a place in our lives? "Babbitt" is a hustling, prosperous real estate broker and a worthy citizen of Zenith, Ohio. A dutiful husband and father, he chafes under the ever-growing din of continuous quarrel and recrimination in his home, and longs to be free to taste the joys he dreams of in his heart.

Apart from the screening of this really excellent film, Miss Majorie Hutchings will be heard in new selections. This is a treat to the musical ear, and all who like to hear high class songs properly interpreted should not miss this on Monday.

Water or Oil of Turpentine. Water is free and, consequently, manufacturers of Shoe Polish are tempted to make use of it as a solvent. The manufacturers of "NUGGET" realizing that water tends to rot the leather and the stitches, have resisted this temptation and continued to use Oil of Turpentine, which is the best solvent for high quality waxes.
