In one of the most unique roles of her career in the motion picture world. Dorothy Dalton won the hearts of all who crowded Allen's Theatre on Friday, when "Black and White," an unusual picture, based on an underlying element of mother's love, was staged for the first time. In three different roles, first, that of a modest, loving wife; and finally as a dashing Parisian beauty. Miss Dalton is given every opportunity to display her versatility and to capitalize her beauty. Although her roles were difficult, they perhaps proved to be as effective as any in which she has previously appeared in this city.

The picture was produced on a lavish scale. There are sumptuous scenes in a nobleman's banquet hall, and in strange contrast, wild Indian jungle scenes. The costumes of the women at times are gorgeous.

The plot of the story is clever and exceedingly well worked out. The story comes from the pen of George Barr McCutcheon. It is the tale of a mother's love in fierce struggles against the terrific jealousy, which causes the te
