SAILORS' PRIZE MONEY
London Jan 3.—Now that the fighting is over, the British sailors are thinking of the prize-money that has been mounting up during the war, and which is soon to be distributed among the officers and men of the whole fleet. The amount is a large one, but as under the new scheme it will be divided among all who have taken part in the operations, individual shares may not pan out very much, probably little if any more than has accrued to those taking part in a single large capture in the past.

One of the largest distributions of prize-money in British history took place among the forces who captured Havanna in 1762 of a total of more than $3,500,000 being divided among those men of the two services who had been present. Admiral Pocock and General the Earl of Albemarle received some $900,000 each, while Commodore Koppel and General Elliot each received a nice little nest-egg of $100,000. Two major-generals were richer by $30,000, seven brigadiers by $10,000 apiece and the colonels $3,000. But the army privates and the seamen did not fare so well, as each had to be content with comparatively insignificant sums ranging from fifteen to twenty dollars.

SALVING TORPEDOED SHIPS

London Jan 3.—The big marine salvage companies, not only in England, but in all the Allied countries and Germany are already actively at work on plans to raise the hundreds of ships which have been sunk by mines and torpedoes during the war. The greater part of the ships sunk lie in water that is shallow enough to allow salvage operations to be carried out successfully. Of course, any perishable good will long before they are raised have rotted away, but there are thousands of tons of canned foods for example, which will be undamaged by their long immersion.

Many of the cargoes of perishable foodstuffs were protected against the action of sea water in case they were sunk. Practically all the tea imported into Great Britain for example has been packed in special double-leaded cases, and so most of it will be quite fit when raised from the sea.

During the past four years thousands of tons of cotton have been lost around the British coasts and most of it will be unstable when raised from the depths. The total value of the cargoes which it is anticipated will be raised and fit for sale runs into many millions. This does not include the value of the ships themselves which after dry docking and repairing will be once more sailing the seas as in the days before the war.

LITTLE TO FEAR FROM PLAGUE

London Jan 3.—One quarter of the twenty million inhabitants of the Turkish Empire have died since the beginning of the war. A million have been killed or massacred and the other four have died of hunger and disease. All through the history of the human race, pestilence has followed on war, and plague on famine. With half Europe starving it would seem that the world is ripe for a visitation of cholera or Black Death, which would turn whole countries into deserts.

From remotest times the fact stands out as a certainty that more people have died from the results of war than from war itself.

Yet, according to the most eminent medical scientists, there is little danger of the late war being followed by a world-wide plague. In recent years medical science has advanced by leaps and bounds and by the process of inoculation it can control all the worst epidemic diseases. It is considered probably that in Russia and Turkey, and to a smaller extent in Austria, typhus will claim many victims, but little fear is felt for the rest of the world.

The Difference.

"It is remarkable that so many women should be working."

"Women have always worked," replied Miss Cayenne. "The principal difference just now is that they are working away from home and getting paid for it."—Washington Star.

Looking Backward.

"You remember we met on a railway train?"

"Remember."

"And that meeting led to our marriage?"

"I remember I ran after that train, too. Had I been lucky enough to stub my toe, I'd have missed it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
