In vember 24. 1858 Mr. Langley came to Victoria and again engaged in business, the now widely known firm of Langley & Co, wholesale druggists being established by him. For a number of years his brother James who died last November was associated with him as partner. Mr. Langley's energy and ability and his interest in the welfare of Victoria and the public affairs of the colony, resulted in his being appointed a member of the legislative council of the old colonial days under Sir James Douglas. His services as an able administrator were recognized by his being sent to London as commissioner for the colony during the great exhibition of 1862. So ably did he discharge his duties and actively bring before the people in England the advantages of the colony and its wealth of natural resources that he was offered a knighthood for his valuable services, but declined. Mr. Langley was married to the plate-glass window and the big Pass and other routes. in England in 1862 and came back to Victoria the next year.
