I'm growing Old. My nights are blessed with I feel no symptoms of decay,
I have no cause to mourn nor w
My foes are impotent and shy,
My friends are neither false nor

And yet, of late, I often sigh-My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news,
My growing apathy to rhymes,
My growing love for easy shoes,
my growing hate for crowds and no
My growing fear of ktaing cold,

I'm growing fonder of my staff. I'm growing dimmer in the eyes, I'm growing fainter in my laugh, I'm growing deeper in my sighs, 'm growing careless in my dress-I'm growing frugal of my gold, I'm growing wise, I'm growing-ye I'm growing old

I see it in my changing taste I see it in my changing hair I see it in my growing care; A thousand hints proclaim the As glain as ever truth was told That even in my vaunted youth, I'm growing old The tale in my reluctant ears;

And every boon the hours bequeat

But makes me debtor to the years! E'en flattery's honied words declar The secret she would fain withhold, And tell me, in "How young you are !" Thanks for the years, whose rapid flight My sombre muse so sadly sings, Thanks for the gleams of golden light That tint the darkness of their wing The light that beams from out the sky

Those heavenly mansions to unfold Where all are blest and none may sigh "I'm growing old! Woman's Love.

In a little rosewood casket Which is resting on the stand, There's u package of old letters, Penned by a cherished hand, Will you go and bring them, sister, And read them o'er to-night?

I have often tried but could not, For the tears that dimmed my sight.

Come closer to me, sister ;

Let me lean upon thy breast For my tide of life is ebbing,

And I fain would be at rest:

Read the letters he has written He whose veice I've often heard-Read them over, love, distinctly That I lose not e'en a word. Tell him sister, when you see hir The Letter home above; Tell him that I ne'er upbraided

Ne'er a word of censure spoke.

Though his silence and his absence

My heart had well nigh broke.

Tell him that I watched his coming,
When the noon-tide sun was high.
And when at eve the little angels Lit their star-lamps in the sky, And when he saw I came not, Tell him that I did not chide, But that I ever loved him— That I blessed him when I died.

And have laid me down to slumbe

In the quiet church-yard ground, Place the pictures and the letters Close against my pulseless heart, We for years have been together, And in death we may not part. You may read the letters o'er, I will listen to the words of him, Whem I shall see no more; And ere you shall have finished a horse cough, showing the cause of his an wonted change of attire.

For some days he was absent from his usual post, but the next time I saw him there, I stopped and noticed the same dry, heaves heaven heaven the same dry, hoarse, hacking cough.

I determined to address him on the subject for the morning was damp, and quite unfitted for an aged invalid to be abroad, especially to be standing in one spot, as he was, as usual, intent upon the books.

"You appear to have a bad cough, sir?" I said interrogatively,
"Humph," was his brief reply; as I understood the tone, affirmatively.
"Surely this are unfile morning for you

"Surely this is an unfit morning for you to be abroad in," I added, "And who may have given you the right to say when it's fit for me to be abroad, pray? Who are you?" pray? Who are you?"

"The question may well be asked," I said with a smile, " for, though for well nigh two years, we have exchanged greetings of a morning, I believe this is the longest conversation we have ever held together. I am a physician, sir. Dr. residing in this neighborhood and there. residing in this neighborhood, and, therefore, from my profession, I flatter myself capable of judging when it is proper for an invalid to be abroad." "Humph—a physician! I thought as much; and you want to get me under your hands, eh!—found you out, I don't like doctors, physic, all humbug. It's doctors fill the churchyards," and so saying, the old man pored more deeply into the book he was persign when I come and book he was perusing when I came up, and designed no further conversation. He was now absent oftener than usual, and when I did see him at his accustome and when I did see him at his accustomed spot, the cough which troubled him, still lingered, and evidently gave him some alarm; for he glanced furtively at me, and often seemed as though he would have spoken, but desired me first to break the ice: but I had received such a rebuff when I ventured to speak to him before, that I was determined he should address me first. One day, after a violent fit of coughing, he said:

"You seem young in your business, and hav'nt learnt yet haif the humbug of your elders; you can come to my house if you like, at 10 o'clock to-morrow, and perhaps you can give me something to cure me of this plaguey cough, the only sickness I have ever had in my life, not that I believe you will though, get what money you can for me, that's all;" so saying, he took out an old pocket book that might have vied in antiquity with the most ancient tome on my friend M'Tavish's stall, and writing his name and address on a blank eaf, he tore it out and gave it to me. Willing to humor the old man, I took it good temperedly not with standing the brulesque manner in which it was offered and the offensive expressions which accompanied it, and bowing a good morning,

The next morni -pointment, I called at the house. It was an old building long since pulled down, displaying no outward pretensions to wealth or even comfort, and having before the lower part a plazza with wooden jalousies

As I walked up Broadway, I glanced at the leaf, and read the address.—Mr.

Dutch stoop.
On knocking at the door, it was opened by a vinegar face housekeeper, of prim and staid aspect, who answered my enquiry,—Does Mr. W——reside here?" by propounding another: "Who may you be?" said she.
"I am Dr.——," I replied, "and I have called at the request of Mr. W., whom met yesterday."
"Come in," she said, and left me standing in the passage, while she went up stairs, as I imagined, to her master's pri-

A long conversation appeared to take place between the two, for I must have waited fully ten minutes and began to grow weary, when the prim mob cap appeared over the balustrade above and a shrill voice consoled out.
