

NINETEEN HORSES DROWNED. - Nineteen horses belonging to a Mr. Ramirez, California, were recently drowned at the head of Arroyo Seco, near Los Angeles, by a flood caused by melting snow on the summit of the San Gabriel Mountains.

The last issue of the Toronto Advertiser has an illustrated heading. A view of the city from the bay is the subject, and gives the paper quite a picturesque appearance on its first page. The energetic proprietor is making noticeable improvement in the Advertiser lately.

The most important is to attend to the case at once, and without a single moment's unnecessary delay. It does not apply particularly to this description, it is, of course, applicable to both. Cover the animal with warm blankets, give mucilaginous warm injections every thirty or forty minutes, and the administration of anodynes and sedatives (not stimulants) should be freely resorted to. The medicines which should be used are some of the undermentioned, but we might say that, of the whole, opium, in its different forms, is the most reliable. Ether, one or two ounces (this may be combined with opium), belladonna folia, one to three ounces (extract of same, half a dram to a dram); camphor, one to two drachms; chloroform, two to three ounces; extract of digitalis, from five to eight grains.
