

Canadian firms were awarded 69 contracts in FY 1992 totalling $108.54 million, which were subject to prior review, and thus recorded by the World Bank. (There were many other contracts

of performance procurement which can provide useful indications data provide an additional window into WB performance can be drawn. However, contract accuracy and now firm conclusions about the past future disbursement flows with any degree of a result, contract data cannot be used to predict to 50 percent of all contracts actually awarded. As data is highly unreliable as it may only present up stand to improve. It should be noted that contract

ment success and those in which Canada may which Canada has experienced definite procure- this report, in an attempt to identify those areas in

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

Canadian firms were awarded 69 contracts in FY 1992 totalling $108.54 million, which were subject to prior review, and thus recorded by the World Bank. (There were many other contracts

of performance procurement which can provide useful indications data provide an additional window into WB

performance can be drawn. However, contract accuracy and now firm conclusions about the past future disbursement flows with any degree of a result, contract data cannot be used to predict

to 50 percent of all contracts actually awarded. As data is highly unreliable as it may only present up stand to improve. It should be noted that contract

ment success and those in which Canada may which Canada has experienced definite procure- this report, in an attempt to identify those areas in

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

Canadian firms were awarded 69 contracts in FY 1992 totalling $108.54 million, which were subject to prior review, and thus recorded by the World Bank. (There were many other contracts

of performance procurement which can provide useful indications data provide an additional window into WB

performance can be drawn. However, contract accuracy and now firm conclusions about the past future disbursement flows with any degree of a result, contract data cannot be used to predict

to 50 percent of all contracts actually awarded. As data is highly unreliable as it may only present up stand to improve. It should be noted that contract

ment success and those in which Canada may which Canada has experienced definite procure- this report, in an attempt to identify those areas in

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of

through FY 1992, as opposed to disbursement data which served as the basis of previous sections of