the French there, is at best, precarious, perhaps impracticable. And were it otherwise, I fear the Conquests of France in the Netherlands would render us very tractable on a Peace, on which Occasion, I apprehend we shall be obliged to restore Cape-Breton, the only Conquest we have been able to make, since the War, with all our wast Superinty by Sea. — We are next to examine the Feazibility of subduing the French Sugar Colonies, the only they have in America, except their Settlement on the River Missippi, which I suppose the Author himself would not advise attempting.

The Principal of the French Sugar Settlements, are Martinico and St. Domingo, or Hispaniola divided between them and the Spaniards. To begin with the latter, I will take upon me to affert that the French alone on that Island, are able to raise 20000 effective Men, willing and able to defend their Properties against a foreign Invader. And we may naturally suppose that the Spaniards on the Island, would rather aid their Catholic Neighbours, than us Protestants. Besides, it is no Secret, that the principal Harbours of that fine Island, particularly those in the Frach Possession, are regularly and strongly fortisted.

In such a Situation then, can we suppose the Conquest of this French Sugar Colony to be so practicable and easy, as this adventrous Writer would persuade us it is? Is there not greater likelihood, that the French, from so sopulous a Colony, contiguous to Jamaica,
