COCHRANE'S SCHEME FOR STATE CONTROL

C.P.R. policy about port development. Van Horne thought that attitude was as sensible as public ownership champions understand the disposition of the Montreal Board of Trade to have been towards the removal of the Grand Trunk's youth. Van Horne said he would move the C.P.R. headquarters to Fort William. He did, and in fulfillment of his prophecy, grass grew in the streets of the town of the twenty-dollar bill. Montreal will never be a second Port Arthur, but what she has never wanted to hold. Her influence is being exerted, therefore, to keep the government straight—not to say to keep the government from what, until yesterday, Montreal professed to despise—the leadership of "wooden railways, run by wooden men."

The management committee which is to operate the Grand Trunk pending the arbitration will, of course, work under Canadian National. Many things have been held up in National administrative development, until the Grand Trunk conversion was assured. But the management recognizes that the job of making earnings and expenses meet must be undertaken without delay. This involves a re-orientation of the National system's management, with the statutory committee as primarily a transitional engine. Duplications such as the express trains between Winnipeg and Edmonton must be cut out and other economies effected.

What Mr. Cochrane Did. Nothing has been finally settled, but the idea of a national system was seen to be inevitable, its governance was seriously considered. At that time it was expected that Mr. Cochrane, the ex-minister of railways, would head the direction of the National. So that there could be no criticism on the score of efficiency of administration, a man of his standing and of the most experienced of C.P.R. vice-presidents a scheme of administration which is on the cards. Of course, it can be said that any advice of any C.P.R. official must be suspect, but this view is untenable by those who know anything of railway affairs. Given a national railway, it is to the public interest that it be administered with the maximum efficiency possible. A man of the standing of Mr. Cochrane's councillor could be relied on to give advice with the same fidelity to the confidence expressed in him that an eminent lawyer would exhibit towards a trusting client.

Big railway administrators are neither crooks nor plagiarists, and when they submit something for public adoption they know that they are liable to public criticism. They pledge their own reputations, and so have the strongest possible interest in pledging their only to things which they believe will stand the test of time. The National management scheme was among Mr. Cochrane's official papers, and is in possession of the department of railways, and I transmit it with this despatch.

"The plan alluded to in the above despatch will be given in tonight's Sunday World."
