No More Bother Winding Machines

Little Electric Motor That Makes Talking Machines New Again

The Shelton Electric Co. of New York, a concern devoted to improvements on mechanical devices of a utility character, have invented a portable motor that runs your talking machine instead of the steel clockwork-like spring, and the household public of the continent are buying them up like hot cakes. For instance, this little motor is simply placed alongside the turntable of the talking machine so that its rubber driving wheel touches the edge. By connecting the electric cord with a light socket or baseboard plug-hole the wee motor drives the machine at perfect tempo. Constantly winding up the talking machine is no longer a bugaboo, no longer a hurdy-gurdy process. By pressing the button the motor stops or starts. One can hardly imagine how different the music sounds under this new arrangement. Instead of the oftentimes irregular speed of the spring-driven record—perhaps the spasmodic tension of a well-worn spring—the rhythm and tempo is perfect. This is most enjoyable in dancing records and in a cheaper make of talking machine the effect is that of an expensive electrically-motored one. The Shelton Motor simply sits alongside the turntable, has no attaching screws or nails. Can be used on Edison, Victor and Columbia types. It never gets out of adjustment and is a wonderful little piece of electric mechanism, hardy and durable. There are already over 25,000 of them in use. John Frodsham, the Victor dealer opposite the Market in Germain street, is the St. John agent for this new talking machine accessory and he has sold a score of them within the past few days after a demonstration. A phone call will make arrangements for showing this clever device.
The cost of the Shelton Motor is very moderate indeed.
