MUMMIES FOUND IN CAVE

(Philadelphia Ledger)
Peculiar in their way were thirteen mummies found a while ago in a cave on Ragam Island, which is one of the Aeolian chain. They were wrapped in skins and nets; but the remarkable point about them was that the cavern which served them as a burial vault was steam-heated. In coldest winter weather it was kept warm by volcanic fires.

Eleven of these thirteen mummies are dead, not for any religious reason, as did the Egyptians of old, but because they did not want to part with them.
Their method was to wrap their departing relatives in the skins and internal membranes of sea mammals, place them in a quagmire and then they died, and hang them up in dry caves.

Many of these mummies that have been found are undoubtedly very ancient; but of the origin and use they are known. Some authorities are of opinion that they came from Japan. At the present time they are much mixed, resulting speaking.

FEWER FAILURES IN PROVINCE THAN IN ANY OTHER YEAR

So Far Only About a Dozen in Whole Province

BUSINESS IS BUOYANT

In 1900 They Numbered Fifty and in 1915 Numbered About Seventy—Some of the Causes of the Present Prosperous Conditions

We hear a great deal today about the prosperity of our province and the plentiful supply of money evident on all sides, and this is largely true and borne out by undisputed fact. One of the least discussed perhaps but still none the less important factors of our present state of affairs is the healthy financial condition of the merchants throughout the length and breadth of New Brunswick as proven convincingly by the comparatively few failures recorded within the last few years.

Take 190 for example. Almost fifty failures in our province among business men and that was a fair general average for the year. In 1915, however, the conditions were anything but sound and the future looked ominous if there should be military disaster bringing of course, and its wake financial ruin. During 1915 we find failures run almost to seventy, the highest in ten years in New Brunswick. Business was uncertain, prices just about holding their own and the weaker merchants went down and out.

The year 1916 found matters considerably improved as told by the story of the failures, for only fifty-one insolvents were recorded. By this time prices were advancing, the markets looked firm, and the uncertainties of a long war still abated.

Better in 1917.
Then on to 1917, with commodities on the steady upward climb, a stock of merchandise enhanced materially in value almost overnight and the average dealer was not slow to take advantage of this remarkable opportunity. Some few percent in giving their customers the benefit of the advance, and the merchants on the whole did well during 1917, and the number of failures dropped to about thirty, an infallible indication that business was in good shape.

The year 1918 witnessed a continuation of these prosperous times. Trade on the whole was good, prices continually advancing, and the merchants realized another very satisfactory twelve months with a failure list of only about twenty in the province.
