DECIDE TO MAKE SUSSEX A BIG TOWN, TAKING IN THE UPPER CORNER.

Public Meeting Dealing With Incorporation Overrides Report of Committee on Boundaries, and Votes for Extension-Attorney General Will Lay the Matter Before Governor-in-Council.

The proposed town of Sussex looms up in a direct line northwesterly to place arge. A public meeting held in the Medor Memorial Hall, at 10 o'clock Friday norning to deal with the question of incorporation decided that the boundaries,

The attorney general said he would like to hear the views of any present who were opposed to the boundaries as recommended the boundaries should be extended to take in the Upper Corner.

William McLeod, seconded by George Hallet, moved that in the opinion of the meeting, the boundaries should be extended to Trout creek bridge, above the Upper Corner, so as to take in that portion of the parish.

Major O. R. Arnold said the committee had carefully considered the whole question and had recommended the proposed boundaries as the most satisfactory which would be adopted.

Dr. Geo. N. Pearson spoke against ex-date as possible, when a decision would be arrived at:

He thanked the committee for the pains taken in endeavoring to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion regarding the boundaries and thanked those at the meeting for fheir presence and attention. The meeting then adjourned.

MOB TAKES CHARGE OF BROAD COVE, C. B.

Two Assyrians and Their Families Badly Beaten and Their Stores Looted -- Police Powerless.

The Kooheys are Assyrian Greeks by birth, but have become British subjects, and have lived in Nova Scotia for twelve years. They own two large stores in Broad Cove, valued at $10,000, and have been doing a good business for some time. There is strong feeling against the foreigners, as the naturalized subjects are called in Broad Cove, and last Saturday night it found expression in an attack upon their property. Their stores were broken into and on the advice of the police officers, who were powerless to construct the rock. and on the advice of the police officers, who were powerless to cope with the mob, they sought refuge in the upper story of one of the buildings. They did not escape, however, without injury, and Mrs. Richard Koohey was violently assaulted, and is now in a critical condition. When they had forced the Kooheys from the defence of their property the members of the mob commenced destroying everything in the two stores. They demolished the windows and fixtures, and either destroyed or stole over $1,000 worth of goods, including gold watches to the value of $450. On Monday the Kooheys went to Port Hood and engaged a lawyer to act for them. On his advice they came to Halifax, and this morning they consulted Attorney General Longley, receiving his assurance to bring the perpetrators of the outrage to justice. It is probable that the services of Detective Power will be engaged and that he will go to Broad Cove

IMMIGRANTS CAME HERE.

Montreal, Aug. 9-(Special)-A spec London cable says: "The board of trade returns give British emigration to Canada for July as 7,132, as compared with 2,657 in July, 1902. During the past seven months 43,597 people from Great Britain emigrated to Canada as compared with 15,321 for the corresponding month last year. The total British emigration to all parts of the world, during the seven months, was 146,763, as compared with 101,857 last year. Canada secured nearly one-third of the total number. The record is a gratifying one to Canada.

"Commenting on the fiscal proposals and relations between Canada and Germany, the Morning Leader, an anti-Chamberlain organ, says that Canada is quite able to look after herself. She is not afraid of Germany. We have sufficient confidence for July as 7,132, as compared with 2,657

It was at first thought that the injuries about the shoulders were caused by the side wheel of the steamer May Queen coming in contact with the body, thereby bringing it to the surface of the water. There is nothing to substantiate this. The doctors in the near by. Newtoff Neglassie states that early Sunday morning—about 2 or 3 o'clock—while making one of his rounds, he overheard a linely conversation between two men. They were at the time a considerable distance away from the whord where Kirby says he and his friend Revell lay down for the night. One of the men, the watchman says, was swearing loudly; the other muttered something inaumure. Later, Kirby walked away from the whaff. He said nothing and made no inquiries.

Later, Kirby walked away from the wharf. He said nothing and made no inquiries of the watchman as to the disappearance of his comrade.

Kirby proceeded to Nawcastle to begin work on the railway with a construction gang. There he remained until coming to Chipman to identify the body.

Kirby was known to have stated before the inquest that he and the other has a later to be stated.

from the steamer by one of its officers. About all he appeared able to relate of the last time he saw his chum was when the latter called for another drink, and, taking the bottle, walked away. He (Kirby) fell asleep immediately after this. It was some time Saturday night. Such, in brief, is what was elicited during the inquiry into the cause of Revell's death. The opinion is freely expressed that the investigation was closed too quickly, and that not enough witnesses were examined. But, as stated above, there may have been sufficient developed since the inquest to warrant further steps in the matter.

The body of the drowned man was intered on Thursday morning. The chum of deceased, Kirby, went to the grave with the body and, doffing his hat, knelt in silence as the coffin was lowered to but heat recting place. There were none but last resting place. There were none but the grave diggers present.

Those saved are:

Oliver F. Hälls, of this city, and Thomas Hodges, of Bridgton, a student at the oniversity of Maine, who came here Saturday night to visit his college chum, Veazie.

The party started from this city in the naphtha launch on a trip to Pleasant Beach, eight miles away. When off Ash Point, at 9.40 o'clock, the launch became entangled in a fish weir. An attempt was made to turn back when suddenly there was a flash and the launch was enveloped in flames. The six occupants of the craft in flames. The six occupants of the craft leaped overboard. They were within 1,000 feet of the shore but Holmes and Crocker were unable to swim. The efforts of the rere directed towards saving those two and Crocker nearly drowned Hills by grasping him about the shoulders. Both men sank but Hills finally succeeded in freeing himself.

Hodges swam thirty yards to a boat and, cutting it loose, found that it contained no oars. By this time Veazie and Hall, who had clung to the launch, had the craft half filled with water in a futile attempt to stifle the flames. Veazie started to swim toward the smaller boat and Hodges threw the rudder towards him but the man suddenly threw up his hands and

Orocker disappeared at the side of the burning launch, which soon afterwards loctors in the post-mortem examination sank stern first with Hall, who was still To the Old Days. Hodges had found a refuge. Fishermen later put out and rescued the two men. At dawn today the bodies of Hall, Veazie and Holmes were found at the fish weir. That of Crocker was washed ashore at Crescent Beach two miles from here late this afternoon.

It was discovered this morning that the top of the tank which furnished fuel for the launch had been left open. Several gallons of the fluid apparently had dropped into the body of the launch. A lighted lantern at the stern of the boat was in close proximity to the tank and was in close proximity to the tank and probably caused the explosion.

agriculture was received. I was, quite satis-fied that there were a good many land-lords about who would be glad of any good old times when rents were adjusted according to the amount of wheat that could be grown and sold at prices kept high by legislation. The other outburst was when somebody mentioned Mr. Chamberlain's hame, connecting it with the expression of a hope that by his agency some industries now hard, put to it might be naintained, and others, perhaps, restored. industries now hard put to it might be maintained, and others, perhaps, restored. This indicated, to me, at all events, that the idea of protection for certain home industries dominated the meeting. And when Mr. Parker Smith, at the close, suggested that politics had been somewhat dull of late, but that they now had a great cause and a great leader, and should be well content it struck me that he quite voiced tent, it struck me that he quite voiced tent, it struck me that he quite voiced the general sentiment.

Beyond this I confess I found the proceedings rather dull. There was evidently genuine satisfaction over the fact that the Duke of Sutherland presided. The duke did not strike me as very wonderful. He looks a little like our own Hon. "Jim" Sutherland, but with "some of the tough fibre combed down, and something, at times, like Mr. George Casey, ex-M. P. He had the aiv of a man doing his duty, and that no doubt, is highly commendable in wealthy dukes when there is a political campaign going on.

The young Duke of Westminster was not there, but intimated his approval by letter. But there was a fillip of interest lent by the presence of Lord Heneage, who is said to be rather close to Lord Rosebery. He was not expected, and was not invited, but when they got him there they had him going the resolution nominating the general propose the resolution nominating the general committee. This was a stroke of practical politics not without its risks, for while al politics not without its risks, for while many present were plainly interested in duties on grain, Lord Heneage blandly suggested that probably the inquiry would not show that there was any need for food duties at all. The interest in this incident is heightened by the circumstance that Lord Rosebery has so far, I am told, declined to join the Free Trade Association recently organized.

Another Incident.

The other suggestive incident came when Mr. Brassey, who has lost several elections as a Liberal candidate, including a recent bye-election, who has been identified with Lord Rosebery's Liberal League, and who sued some time ago a comprehensive pla issued some time ago a comprehensive plan for the general reorganization of the empire, announced that he was going to stand by this new league and the new policy even if he had to separate from his political party. There had been rumors that some Liberals were to come out for Mr. Chamberlain, and this morning a letter appears in the times signed by eleven of them. None are members of parliament, and the Liberal evening papers, with what warrant I do not know, rather make fun of the defection, on the ground that those who are known have long had a fancy for Mr. Chamberlain, while the others are un-

At the close of the meeting the Duke of Sutherland named a central committee composed of men nearly all of whom are closely associated with Mr. Chamberlain. So that, while it was not exactly an exciting occasion, I have no doubt the meeting really marked the opening of a formidable compaign, to be conducted under the direct inspiration of the man who, whatever his other limitations, is con-"Johnnie, when you and your brother fight so much who generally beats?" A NOVEL STRIKE.

Jersey City Employer Refused to Reduce Wages, and the Union Ordered Men Out.

A strike because a firm refused to reduce wages is something novel, but that is what has occurred in the employer refusing to recognize a union. A representative of the union asked him to establish the International Machinists' Union scale. He refused, on the ground that some of the men were worth more to him than the union scale, and he proposed to follow the old rule of paying a man what he was worth. He was willing to meet all the union conditions except paying the uniform rate of wages, which would recognize the union, and, failing to do this, a strike was ordered.

The employer proposes to fight the union to the end, on the ground that "A man should have an incentive to prove himself a better workman than another." This reason seems to be one which is likely to win to its support the common-sense men, in large majority always, who look after their own interest first; and non-union men are likely to be protected by an employer of this kind. The labor leader who engineered a strike on the ground that it is for the moral benefit of labor, and yet presents to the strikers for inducement the reduction of seventy-five cents per day in their pay, is too much of an idealist to win any dangerous measure of following.—Boston Transcript.
