CIRCULATION OF SAP.

As many of our farmers are just out of the sugar-bush, the following will be interesting to them:

President Clark, of the Massach President Clark, of the Massachusetts College, has been experimenting on the circulation of sap, and the facts he noted have recently been made public. The sugar maple (Acer succharinum) was taken for his experiments. It is well known now that the sap of plants is not at rest in the winter, but that moisture is absorbed continually, even when the roots are thoroughly encased by frost. They probably thaw the icy matter by the aid of their internal heat, or in accordance with Mohr's theory, there are particles of vapor in the soil so finely divided that they do not freeze, except under a very low temperature; and hence the roots can avail themselves of this matter without any thawing proand hence the roots can avail themselves of this matter without any thawing process being required. At any rate, the absorptiou goes on all winter and greater toward spring. The sugar maple being "tapped," or bored into, the sap oozes out, and is caught in vessels and BOOTS & SE boiled for the sugar, which is left on evaporation. Professor Cark finds that there is an average increase in quantity from its first flow till a meximum period is reached, and then there is an average In short, everything usually kept in a first

But there are interruptions from day to day, sometimes more some-times less; and what is the cause or causes of these fluctuations it was his purpose to find. It is remarkable that steadily cold or steadily warm weather had the effect of lesseniong the flow, while the greatest amount of sap ran when there was warm days and cold rights. The whole stem structureheart-wood as well as the most recentheart-wood as well as the most recentis filled with the rising sap; but the north side of a tree gives out more, and continues two week after the south side is dry. This accords with Risler's recent experiments, which show that direct sun-light is a leading agent in evaporation; and thus on the south side evaporation would be greater than on the north, and there would be less left for the "tap." The quantity of sap flowing from different heights of the trunk was tested, and at twelve fest the greatest quantity was given out. Of ty was given out Of course trees will vary in quantity given health and other peculiarities; but the landinative Medicine—Charms, amulets, talismans, and phylacteries all belong to the list of articles which produce imaginative cures; seeing that the persons who trust to them believe in some good obtainable from them, in purse or in person, in health or in welfare; and if the good does come, more assuredly the imagination is the channel through which it approaches. Two or three years ago, at a town in Worcestershire, after the inquest on the body of a man drowned in the Severn, a woman applied to the chief he same county, this was actually done, ith fatal results; for the man had died of phoid fever, which was in this way communicated to several living persons. A ring made of the hinge of a coffin, and a rusty old sword hung by the bedside, are (in some districts) charms against the cramp: headache is removed by the halter that has hung a oss that has grown on a human skull in a aveyard. A dead man's hand, of a man chips of a gallows, worn in a little bag round the neck, will cure the ague; a stone with a hole in it, suspended at the bed's head, will prevent nightmare. Many verses are known, which if repeated aloud, are credited with curing cramp, burns, and other bodily troubles. When you have the whooping-cough apply for a remedy to the first person you meet with, riding on a piebald horse—a ceremony that Dr. Lettsom, the physician, was fated more than once to become acquainted with.—All The Yare Bound.

of fish, as the element in which they fire answers the same purpose. If the eye had not been furnished with a liquid to wish it, and a lid to sweep it off, things would appear as they do when you look through a dusty glass. Along the edges of the eyelids there are a great number of little tubes or glands, from which flows an oily substance which spreads over the surface of the skin, and thus prevents the edges from being sore or irritated, and it also helps to tears within the lid.. There are six little muscles attached to the eye which enable us to move it in every direction; and when we consider the different motions they are eapable of giving to the eye, we cannot but dimire the goodness of Him who formed them, and thus saved us the trouble of turning our heads every time we wished to view ut object.
