

personal interviews with the members as individuals. So strongly did I feel before going to New York the utter hopelessness of trying to present to the Trustees in any formal way what I have in mind and what I know to be the wisest course to pursue, that I am not surprised that ever since the meeting I have felt that the impression I sought to convey has been harmful rather than helpful so far as any adequate appreciation of my efforts may be concerned. If you can imagine how I should have felt a year ago attempting to tell the Trustees what was in my mind about the significance of Colorado and the work to be accomplished there in reference to my own work and the larger work of the Foundation, you will appreciate just how I feel at the present time about attempting to adequately convey what I am now striving to effect. The truth of the matter is that there are certain classes of work which can only be realized to the degree to which they are the expression of personality, and the minute a man begins to disclose to others the things that lie deepest in his own nature and the secrets that are nearest to his own heart, that minute he begins to destroy his highest vision and the^{ly} frustrate its real accomplishment.

If after reading this letter you will continue to remember what I am now saying, unless something very unforeseen transpires it should be possible for me during the course of next year to have on your table a volume which through life
