NVOLUNTARY.

Sorrow and pity had clutched my heart, Lashed its chords to their infinite chair They watched, dull eyed, as I sat apart, A pallid fate at the gates of pain.

Torturing thoughts from an empty past Surged within, like a hurrying pack Of hungry wolves which before the blast Freited the snows in the beaten track.

Colder than where they gibber and glide
My future beckoned across life's way;
I turned and shivered and crept to hide
Where ruined hope on my hearthstone-lay.

When, lo; a presence! I saw him stand Rosy and smiling, a dimpled child. Draw near and eye me, with outstretched hand. "Catch me who will! I am-tree and wild!"

He took my fingers the damp had chilled To his little red mouth's wooing breath; He touched my hair that the nights had filled With wan, wet dews of despair and death.

Bound my heart he threw warm red roses, Bound and pulled me with artful grace; Subtly sweet with imperious poses He clasped me close in his soft embrace.

Trembling, frightened, with feet that stumble "Tell me thy name, oh, thou pretty boy!" He laughed at my voice that fear had humble "Ho, foolish coward, my name is Joy!" —Julien Gordon in Colliar's Weekl

The Way Some Men Love

The Story of a Man's Sacrifice. By Elizabeth Vose.

..... "She'll be hard to tether, Kitty will. It'll be like lassoing a butterfly, an I low as the man as can do it ain't appeared in camp yit," said Joe Bartlett meditatively. "As for me, I ain't got the show of a chance. How in thunder can I expect a dainty little girl like Kitty to care for a rough, ignorant feller like me?"

He took the pipe from his mouth and, knocking the ashes from it, filled !t carefully, but it was evident that his mind was not upon his task.

"Can't even speak grammar as I'd ort to," he muttered with disgust. "But they ain't nothing I wouldn't do for Kitty-Lord love her-even to studying a grammar book." Joe was modest. He had no self esteem whatever and undervalued his merits. That so remarkable a creature as Kitty should ever love him was to be considered only in the light of an impossibility. If it's love became hopeful, he reviled himself and blushed at his temerity. Yet Joe was foreman of the new mine at Clear Creek camp and the most important man in the place.

"No, the man ain't arrived yit," continued Joe, "an when he does"-he turned a little pale-"when he does God help Joe Bartlett."

That evening, as was his habit, Joe was at Amos Carter's cabin. There were two reasons why he fiked to spend an evening with Carter-he enjoyed swapping yarns with him over their pipes and Kitty happened to be Carter's daughter. Kitty never suspected his love. Joe knew that she did not return it, and he was not a man to wear his heart on his sleeve. If any one had asked her about her opinion of Joe, she would have confessed frankly that she was almost as fond of him as of her father.

In the midst of a story of the plains which he was telling for the twentleth time there was a loud rap on the door. Carter went to open it. A stranger stood on the threshold, a tall, slender, well made young fellow, wearing the garb of the city bred man. "Is this Mr. Carter's place?" he asked.

"That's my name, young feller. Will ou come in?" "I was told," said the newcomer a he complied with the invitation, "that I should find Mr. Bartlett here." Joe came forward and offered his toil hardened hand to the stranger. "You are Mr. Ames, the superintendent's son, I guess. He wrote me you were coming up for a spell, but I didn't 'low we'd see you till the next stage. I am glad to see you, sir," he said heartily. A certain indifference or indolence which seemed habitual vanished from the young man's face and manner. He held out his hand frankly. "Thank you. I have come to rusticate. I have a bad reputation at home. It arises from a slight difference be tween the governor and myself. I am conscientiously opposed to work." He squared his shoulders and laughed. "I am supposed to take father's place here, but I have perfect confidence in you, Bartlett, and I shall take it as a favor if you will forget to remind me of the responsibilities of the situation." Again his boyish laugh rang out, and the others laughed in sympathy.

He was unmistakably a good deal of a dandy. His linen was as immaculate as it would have been in the city, and the hand from which a diamond flash ed was as white and shapely as woman's. "We must be good friends, Bartlett," he continued, "for I want you to let me down easy on the labor problem Dad wants to make life a treadmil for me. A broad smile from his hearers greet ed this statement.

"I hope you know what work is, young feller," said Carter, his smile nding in an audible chuckle.

Clay Ames never knew what reply he made. His eyes for the first time had met Kitty's, and he forgot everything else but the tall slip of a girl with the wild rose face. In less than a week everybody in camp knew that the superintendent's son was in love with Kitty Carter. Half the men in the camp were his rivals, but they all liked the young boss, who had made himself one of them from the first night of his arriv-Kity's ways were maddening. and was on his way to the mine. Looking up, he saw Kitty's flying figure speeding toward him. He knew at once that something was wrong. She was breathless, her lips were blanched and her eves wild with terror.

"Kitty, what is it? Anything wrong at the mines?" he asked anxiously. She caught his arm to steady herself. "There's been a slide!" she gasped, first saw Clay Ames—then there was a sickening sound as of muffled thunder, a horrible underground grouning, fol-lowed by a trash. A second slide had occurred and Joe Bartlett was buried beneath it.

"and Clay"-A sob choked her voice, and the ago ny in her face went to Joe's heart like a knife stab. His face whitened.

For a second or two the crowd was awed into stence by the awfulness of the tragedy and then a cry of horzor burst from a hundred throats. Women screamed and men grew white and covered up their eyes as if thus they might shut out the memory of the brave face that but a moment before had smiled at them from its grave.

It was hopeless from the first. Yet never did men work more heroically than the miners of Clear Creek camp for the next 12 hours to reach their comrade. Rough men most of them were, but they eried like babies when at last Joe's crushed body was lifted from under the debris and the light of day fell upon his unconscious Counting Buttons. In my early schooldays (1855-60) in Yorkshire we counted one another's buttons, after the fashion of sortes, according to the order "tinker, tailor, soldler, sailor, rich man, poor man beggar man, thief." Sometimes "apothecary, plowboy," came in. The first time after my ordination that I went into Sunday school I noticed one little boy counting the buttons on my cassock from the bottom upward. Has anything been written about buttons? Whence such phrases as "Dash my buttons," "I don't care a button" and "He's got all his buttons on?" It is possible to have too many. It is re-lated of some North American red men that they refused to listen to the teaching of an English missionary because he could not readily explain the existence of buttons on the back of his coat where they were of no use. Also there is the case of the Frenchman who committed suicide because life was all "buttoning and unbuttoning." As for their significance, we may instance the buttons of the mandarins and the sad history of Sir Walter Scott's school fellow, whose wits went wool gathering when he missed the familiar but

"Is Clay anything to you, Kitty?" he asked haskily.

"Brerything—all the world to me," monned Kitty. "My heart will break if he dies."

Joe unclasped her trembling fingers from his arm.

"Please heaven we won't let him die, dear," he said gently, and a moment later he was gone.

How the men worked-to reach the death trap where six of their comrades were entombed until, exhausted, they were compelled to fall back, while others filled their places! How one man, tireless and determined, kept always at the head, never resting for a moment. To tell all this would make a story of itself.

Joe Bartlett inspired everybody and cheered and encouraged the despairing crowd that gathered about the entrance of the mine, and when, after hours of hard work, the last dividing wall of earth was penetrated and an opening made large enough for a man to enter, it was Joe Bartlett who, with no thought of his own danger, climbed through into the chamber beyond and one by one lifted the haif dead men, to those waiting on the outside to receive them.

Young Ames had been farthest backs and was the last to be rescued. He was very weak, but he waved his hand feebly to the cheering crowd as Joe lifted him bask to life and safety.

Neither loathed food and my weight was reduced to ninety-five pounds. Neither doctors' medicine nor anything else that I had taken up to that time seemed of the slightest benefit. I was confined to bed for nearly a year and I thought that nothing but death could end my sufferings. Happily an acquaintance of my father's one day brought me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and urged me to try them. I did so, and I thought they helped me some, and my father got more. After I had used a few boxes all my friends could see they were helping me, and by the time I had taken nine boxes I was enjoying better health than I had ever had in my life before, and had gained fifteen pounds in weight. I tell you this out of gratitude so that other young girls who may be weak and sickly may know the way to regain their health."

Says the Late Premier of Manitoba Kept His Promises to the Prohibitionists.

Boissevain, Man, Oct. 23. — W. W. Buchanan and W. R. Mulock, Q. C., cousin of Hon. Mr. Mulock, Postmatter-General, addressed a great prohibition meeting here last night in the interests of Hugh John Macdonald. Mr. Mulock, in a speech of an hour, stated that he was an ardene supporter of Hugh John Macdonald; that in the past the Liberal party had not risen to the occasion, and that now the Liberal-Conservative party had given the greatest prohibition law that had ever been enacted in the land. Hon. Clifford Sifton had posed as a prohibitionist. When we haw that had ever been enacted in the land. Hon. Clifford: Sifton had posed as a prohibitionist. When we prohibitionists had a majority of 30 to 1, all we got from him was a petition to Otte 1. Mr. Sifton had enacted a law taking the power of licensing out of the Government's hands and replacing it with a board of commissioners. Under Norquay the licenses were administered by the Government and this would be done under the Prohibition Act enacted by the Macdonald Government. We had long been waiting for a man to make a prohibitory law and Hugh John Macdonald was the first man who ever had the courage to do so. He (Mulock) was not a hide-bound party man. If the Hon. Clifford Sifton had brought in a prohibitory bill he would have been there to support him, but he had lost his opportunity. "When I ask you to support the man who has enacted that legislation. WIFE FORCED Hackman Confessed on His Better Half's Advice.

Horror-Stricken Man Owned up First to His Wife, Then Followed Her Wise Counsel.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 27.-It was woman who brought to light the whole revolting story of the daugging, ill-treatment and murder of poor Jen-nie Bosschieter at the hands of the our well-known and heretofore esteemed young men of Paterson ,who now stand accused of murder.

To his wife Hackman Augustus H.

Sculthorpe told the story of the wild ride. His wife, a young woman, listened with growing horror to the narrative of the crime to which her husband was technically a party. The children had just been put to bed.
"What shall I do, Jennie?" the husband asked, in agonized tones, his story now told.

Do? You have a duty to perform Tell the police and trust God for the rest. Go and tell all you know." "I dare not," groaned the backman.

I haven't the courage."
But the brave wife urged her husband to communicate with the author-ities, and that night the police received their first information, which resulted in the arrest of Walten C. Mc Allister, George J. Kerr, William A Death and Andrew Campbell.

The hackman had told the story. His wife remained in their modest home, awaiting the result Sculthorp was made a prisoner, but was released on bait of $500. He may be indicted for complicity in the mur der. But his brave wife prays for his exoneration.

"I don't know what will become of us," she said, "if my husband is ad-judged guilty, but I do not feel that he intended doing any wrong. "It was wrong of him to have con cealed the facts until Sunday. Tha was his only wrongdoing. He was in a terrible mental condition. He felt that it would be an awful thing to drag those young men of high stand(ing in the town into so terrib; a an affair, but I convinced him that it was a thousand times worse to keep silent, no matter who was to suffer "I was as frightened as my husband was when he told me the details of that awful ride. He said that he was at his stand at the Eric depot when he was told that he had been tele-
