CURE SICK HEADACHE.

STUDY YOUR HORSE.

At the Animal Has Mental Trouble, Try to Remedy Them.

To begin with, does your horse suffer from nostalgia or homesickness? Most horses do, and many really pine away and die from no other cause. We can at least, by making the poor creature thoroughly comfortable, do all in our power to "give his pain succor" and make him happy and contented, for then homesickness of the acute and chronic form men know few more distressing ailments. Is your horse's disposition sociable or unsociable? You don't know? Well, why not find out?

Does it irritate him to have his yoke-mate or neighbors eating noisily and selfishly while he does? Is privacy evidently his preference? Very well, then, lay boards or zinc or tin or canvas shut off both sides of his stall at the head so that he may eat in peace and live the isolated life which he prefers.

If he lays back his ears or snaps at his neighbors or fidgets and kicks at the partitions, etc., he does not fancy company—at least at meal-times—and he will be better, do better and (here the pocket comes in) keep more cheery if you cater to his fancy. If, on the contrary, a "shy feeder," let him see others eat; even let him by a simple arrangement feed from the same manger as one of his neighbors, which is to be tied up short until Master Dainty has eaten all he will, when, upon allowing the neighbor to partake, the fastidious one will redouble his efforts to eat just to spite the late comer at the feast. The writer has used this plan with many poor feeders from race horses down and always with the best results.—F. M. Ware in Outing Magazine.

He Hadn't Changed a Bit.
The Smiths had invited the minister to dinner. As the last course was reached little Willie, who had been closely watching the guest almost constantly through the meal, looked over at him once more and said:

"You haven't changed a bit since you started eating, have you, Mr. Curtis?"

"Why, no," laughed the minister. "Why do you ask that question?" "Because," blurted Willie, confused by the pairs of eyes focused on him, "because I heard pa tell ma you'd make a big-bag of yourself as soon as you got your eye on the corned beef and cabbage."—Bohemian Magazine.

He Had Had Some Help.
The man who applied at headquarters for a "little help" from the charitable association set forth his case with so much tact and moderation that the secretary was beginning to be favorably impressed.

"I can't ask them to do too much," the applicant said modestly. "You see," he continued, in an outburst of delicacy and ingenuously, "they paid for my wedding last month, and 'twas a real swell one."—Youth's Companion.

SAILOR'S PRACTICAL JOKE.

How Taffy Introduced Himself to His Superior Officer.

A young Carmarthenshire farm laborer, after a quarrel with his parents, made his way to Swansea, where he enlisted for the royal navy. He was as simple and innocent a country lad as ever delighted the hearts of the old hands, and he had not been many hours aboard before his new friends devised a plan to victimize him.

One of them sneaked the gold-laced cocked hat and frock coat of an officer from his cabin, the door of which, being wide open, disclosed the glittering uniform reposing on a chair. The borrower of the gaudy dress took it to the unsuspecting Welsh lad, and assuming the authoritative tone of a petty officer, ordered the recruit to dress himself in the officer's clothes.

"It's your full dress uniform," said the joker gravely. "You must show yourself to the captain in ten minutes, so look alive. Yes, it's two sizes too big for you, but the captain's a stickler for a good fit, and it's the master-tailor to be altered."

Utterly unsuspecting of his abysmal ignorance of the service, Taffy proudly donned the long-tailed coat with its gold epaulettes, the gold-laced trousers, and cocked hat. Instead of the accompanying sword, the poor victim was given a rifle and fixed bayonet, and dispatched upon deck.

"All you've got to do," said the headless, grave-faced jokers grouped around poor Taffy, "is to walk up to the captain on the quarter-deck, hold out your right hand, and bid him good-day. Then stand at attention while he examines the fit of your togs."

They accompanied Taffy to the bottom of the hatchway and then retired to their berths to roll on the floor in paroxysms of gleeful merriment.

The captain, pacing the quarter-deck, was at the same time, like the rest of the officers and men who witnessed the apparition, struck speechless by the sight of a recruit, clad in an officer's full dress, with a rifle and fixed bayonet on his left shoulder, who came right up to him with right hand outstretched as to an equal, and said, with a broad smile of pleasure: "Ow arr 'eu to-day, surr?"

The amazement of the ship's company who witnessed the incident was profound, but no one enjoyed the joke more than the genial captain himself—or less than poor Taffy.

PRISONERS IN SCOTLAND.

Standard of Education Among Them Is Low—Taught Trades.

The annual report of the Prison Commissioners for Scotland, just issued, contains some interesting information on criminology north of the Tweed. The numbers received into prison were unfortunately higher than usual, and the increase in suicides, the number on the police, cruelty to children, and drunkenness, is accounted for by the fact that 1906 was a prosperous year of employment in the lower grades of labor. Too many prisoners have never been taught any trade, and the standard of education among them is low. Out of 54,000 convicted prisoners, the report states, only 28 had a superior education, and one-sixth were illiterate. Many, of course, shows signs of defective intellect. The main idea of the treatment of a prisoner is to teach him some useful trade so that he may have the means of earning an honest livelihood on leaving jail. The physical welfare of the prisoners is well looked after. The men are drilled, and the women are given classes in Swedish drill. The presence of a small mirror in each cell has gone a long way towards heightening pride of appearance in both men and women prisoners.

When Life Was Little Valued.
The 223 capital offences which the old English law recognized as punishable by death did not keep down crime; and with the abolition of the death penalty for all crimes but murder, crime in England, as well as everywhere else all over the world where the death penalty has been modified, lessened markedly. Notes The Boston Traveler. Edmund Burke said that he could, in his time, obtain the assent of the House of Commons to any bill carrying death punishment. In Burke's day all classes of the community endeavored, with success, to have offences which injured them made subject to the extreme penalty. It would be difficult to-day even to imagine a list of 223 crimes which could be classed as misdemeanors, and this number in England, a century ago, was not altogether a legacy from the dark ages, because 156 of them were of later date than the reign of the Georges.

A man's life was not very valuable in those days. If he scratched his name on Westminster bridge; if he wore a wig or false moustache or other disguise on a public road; if he cut down a young tree; if he stole property worth more than a dollar and a quarter; if he had been transported for crime and returned a day ahead of the expiration of his punishment; if he wrote a threatening letter; for any and all of these things, and for two hundred more than these, he was hanged by the neck until he was dead. The problem of crime was solved in those days by putting the criminal to death on the theory that there was no hope of regenerating a felon, and while he lived his influence would spread and corrupt the community. It was better, therefore, for his own sake as well as that of society, that he should be dead.

As late as 80 years ago there were at one time in London fifty-eight persons—one of them a child under ten years of age, under sentence of death. Morganatic Marriages.
The term morganatic as applied to marriages found its origin in an ancient custom. In olden times the bridegroom on the day after his marriage gave his bride a morning gift (morganate). In the case of a nobleman who wedded a wife beneath his station his gift constituted the wife's portion or endowment.

CUTS HIS WAY OUT.

Charlebrant Keeps Kingston Penitentiary Officials Busy.

Charlebrant, the Sault Ste. Marie murderer, has again created a sensation at the penitentiary by attempting to escape for a third time within a year. He was caught just in the nick of time. It will be remembered that Charlebrant last June made a most sensational escape. One morning his cell was discovered empty. A dummy was found in his bed, and the guard had passed his cell throughout the night without suspicion. The murderer had got through his cell window and let himself down into the yard, and then scaled the outer walls. Several days later he was caught near Mallorytown, wandering about hungry and footsore.

Some time later Charlebrant caused another scare at the penitentiary. Once more his cell was discovered empty, and the prison guards were called together. Eventually the missing convict was found up the chimney, having made his way out of his cell and into a place where masons had been working. The Sault murderer, who is of somewhat weak mind, but keen in some ways, was then put into one of the safest cells in the prison on the ground floor, but even there he was not safe without constant watching. He was missed from his cell a few days ago, and again excitement was caused. Finally, he was discovered in a warehouse into which he had made his way, after cutting through the wall of his cell.

The resources of Charlebrant are remarkable. He is most expert in cutting his way out and in using improvised ropes. Where he gets the tools with which to work is a mystery to the prison authorities. He has been kept in solitary confinement on account of his condition and inclinations, but still he gets the necessary tools.

THE PERILS OF LABOR.

No Less Than Ninety-One Fatalities Reported During May.

Reports to the Labor Department show that the number of trade disputes during May was 49, an increase of 12 over the corresponding month of 1906. The loss in working days was approximately 88,325 as compared with 45,675 in May of last year. The increase is largely due to the strike of coal miners in the West and of longshoremen in Montreal. There were about 411 firms and 11,697 employees affected by the various disputes.

There was a marked upward tendency in wages in nearly all lines of industry during the month. The number of new agreements with respect to wages reported to the Department was considerably in excess of that during the corresponding period in any previous year since 1903. Nearly all the new agreements were on the basis of higher wage schedules. In the majority of cases the increases were obtained as a result of amicable negotiations and without friction between employers and employees.

During May there were 237 work people injured in industrial accidents. Of these 91 were fatal and 196 resulted in serious injuries. Railway accidents were responsible for twenty fatalities and thirty by them were injured.

How the Months Got Their Names.

The months of the year obtained their names from widely-varying sources. January was named from the Roman god Janus, the deity with two faces, one looking to the past and the other to the future. February comes from the Latin word februa, to purify. It was the ancient Roman custom to hold festivals of purification during that month. March owes its name to an old god of war. Among the Saxons this month was known as least, meaning spring, which was the origin of our word Lent. It is claimed by some that April was named from the Latin word aperire, open, in signification of the opening buds. In Saxons days it was called easter in honor of Easter the Goddess of Spring, from which comes our word Easter. May was named after Maia, the Roman goddess of growth or increase, and June was from the Latin juvenis (young). Julius Caesar himself named July in his own honor, and August was likewise named by Augustus Caesar. September is from the Latin word septem, meaning seven, it being the seventh month of the year according to the old Roman calendar, and October, November, and December likewise retain the names they were known by in the old Roman calendar.

The Flight of the Sun.
Astronomers know that the sun, accompanied by the earth and the other planets, is moving toward a point in the northern heavens with great speed. The bright star Alpha Lyrae lies not far from the point toward which the sun is moving. Every moment we are getting nearer to the place where that star now is. When shall we get there?
