SPELLING REFORM

Dr. C. T. G. Scott, secretary of the simplified spelling board, is elated over President Roosevelt's order that the "reform spelling" be used in official documents issuing from the White House.

Professor Charles McMillan, Princeton University, says he does not think spelling reform would be

we should by all means retain the old methods of spelling."

"We must first secure uniform pronunciation before we can hope to have a successful phonetic system of spelling," says Prof. James Morgan Hart, head of the English department at Cornell. "I can't say that I distike the innovation, but the men at the head of it are not recognized leaders and do not command a very extensive following. I think President Roosevelt was a bit hasty."

'I do not believe it is possible or desirable by any act of government to change the orthography of the English language," says Prof. Faunce of Brown university. "The result of centuries of growth cannot be annihilated by act of congress or by any organization large or small."

Bystander, in the Toronto Sun, has the following excellent comment time that to regulate the spelling of the English language is one of the functions of the President of the United States. Long usage has settled our spelling. All our printed books have conformed to it, and would be depreciated by the change; all our dictionaries would be discarded; while the saving to the printer would be trifling in comparison. By substituting "thru" for "through" the printer would be saved three letters, while violence would be done to a general rule of the language, which seems to repel terminations in "u" except in the cases of diphthongs or the English language is one of the except in the cases of diphthongs or except in the cases of diphthongs or incorporated foreign names, such as "Hindu" and "Emeau." Is there not at least one redundant letter in the President's own names. At all exercises the president's own names. At all exercises the president's own names. Then notice how the Metropolitan caved in on the two cent a mile question when Maclean and the World picked up a club and shouted. trouble in this country, nine times out of ten, is not in the lack of law, but in the apathy of men appointed and paid to enforce the law.'

The statement has been made that many children in the city are forced to leave school after passing the entrance because of the high fees at the Collegiate Institute, comments the Woodstock Express. Continuation classes are suggested, but it would seem much better to make the first form at the collegiate free, than to engage a teacher to duplicate a large part of the work done there. It does not matter much to the ratepayer of the city whether expenditure is undertaken by the collegiate board or by the public school board, as long as the same result is obtained. Further information would be desirable as to whether the fee of seven dollars a year at the collegiate institute bars many pupils from continuing their education.

The luncheon at 1 o'clock yesterday drew together a gathering of prominent educationists. A particularly distinguished guest was Prof. Goldwin Smith, who contributed some interesting remarks, touching upon conditions as they had changed in Toronto during the past half-century. Other speakers were Superintendent Seath, Chairman Shaw of the Board of Education, and James L. Hughes, school inspector.

A little while ago I stood by the grave of the great Napoleon—a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold. I saw him take an empire by the force of his geniu. I saw him upon the frightful field of Waterloo, when chance and fate com-bined to wreck the fortunes of the former king, and I saw him at St. Helena with his hands crossed behind him gazing out at the sad and solemn on mistake to take artificial diges

I thought of the orphans and widows he had made, of the tears that had been shed for his glory, and of the only woman who had ever loved him pushed from his heart by the cruel hand of ambition, and I said I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden sheer. I would said the said is the said is the said in the said is would return the said is worked. worn wooden shoes. I would rather have been that poor peasant with my loving wife by my side, knitting as the day died out in the skies, with my chil-dren upon my knees and their arms about me. Blowing the Nose. Medical experts are calling the attention of the public to the importance of performing the nose blowing operation in a scientific and hygienic manner. First one nostril and then the other should be blown without undue violence. Doctors state that the two nasal passages should never be closed at the same time. If they are obstructed, as in the case of a cold, the back of the throat is filled with compressed air, and this, together with the discharge and the microbes which it contains, be driven through the eustachial tube into the middle ear and lead to serious results. A great authority on the subject used to forbid his patients to blow their noses when suffering from a cold. The course is hardly one which will commend itself to those in the habit of catching colds. The best advice would seem to be that when it is

Germany the Modern Rome.

Let the German people keep a lesson from antiquity before their eyes. Once before an England and a Germany of no less different character have no less different character have con-fronted each other. They were Car-thage and Rome. And old Rome with its policy of force and power finally conquered the cash politics of Carthage and raised itself to the position of the first power upon earth. We have historical example when we say that the German people must return from the imitation of the un-German Carthaginian-British finance policy and must go back to the Roman-German policy of power and might. In no other way can a really great Weltpolitik be promoted in the hope perhaps of making ourselves ultimately the leading people in the world.—Berlin Grenzhoten.
