REDEMPTION OF CUSTOMS AND LAN-GUAGE BY THE GAELIC LEACUE.

the Nation.

League was founded in Ireland, its principal objects being to preserve the Irish language as a spoken ton-gue and to cultivate a modern liter-ature in Irish. For the first few ature in Irish. For the first few years of its existence comparatively little progress was made beyond the teaching of Irish in a few classes in Dublin and in the country and the publication and distribution of some Dublin and in the country and the publication and distribution of some propagandist pamphlets.

At the advent of the Gaelic League the Irish language was fast disappearing, and with it a wast treasure of traditional lore in the form of poems and stories handed down for generations. In scarcely any of the schools was Irish taught, and in the national schools of the west and south, in districts where Irish is still the vernacular, English was taught to pupils who could speak only Irish by teachers who knew no Irish. Even to-day this anomaly in education is not wholly removed.

The Gaelic League, however, set to work in attacking the school system, and has succeeded to such an extent that Irish has been introduced into about 2,000 of these schools. In the meantime the Gaelic League, as a national organization, had been rapidly growing in strength and influence—not a little of its success being due to a series of powerful lectures delivered by the Rev. P. F.

fluence—not a little of its success being due to a series of powerful lectures delivered by the Rev. P. F. Yorke, of San Francisco, in Dublin and in the country during the year 1899. Since that year the progress of the league, for a body which enjoins the learning of a language on its members, was almost phenomenal. Branches rapidly sprang up all over the country until at present over 600 teaching and organizing centres exist.

Each year in Dublin the Oireachtas, the great national festival of the league, is held. It lasts for a week, and consists of competitions for original essays, poems and short stories in Irish, collections of folklore, vocal and musical competitions, in which the pipes, the harp and the fiddle receive special attention; competitions in eratory, recitation, the drama and in dancing, each day being brought to a close by a great concert and drama in the largest halls in the city. Similar festivals on a smaller scale have been gradually started all over the country until there is now scarcely a corner of the country into which the league has entered that has not its yearly Feis, the largest of these, being those held in Cork and Galway.

The Gaelic League does its ewn publishing, and, what has astonished Dublin publishers, the books have met with a rapid sale. Apart from these works of a literary character enormous numbers of elementary books for students are sold, chiefly of the series compiled by the Rev. Father O'Growney—one of the league's earliest and most untiring workers. Dublin has scarcely seen anything more imposing than the funeral of this simple priest through its streets last August en the return of his remains from Los Angeles.

The league maintains two official papers—one "Du Claidheamh Soluis" (The Sword of Light), a weekly bilingual newspaper; the other a monthly magazine wholly in Irish. Rev. Father Dineen is at present engaged on the new Irish Dictionary.

Another man who has left his mark strongly on the league is Mr. John MacNeil, the second vice-president. He is a fine grammarian and one of the league's most accurate scholars. He was one of the original founders of the organization and one of just Each year in Dublin the Oireach

He was one of the original founders of the organization and one of its most earnest workers. Some of your readers may have a closer acquaintance with Rev. Dr. Henebry, late professor of Irish in Washington University. Dr. Henebry is at present in Ireland giving a helping hand with the work sof the league. He recently published a dissertation on Irish music which has raised considerable discussion here. He was one of the original fo

The Gaelic League has permeated into many quarters in Ireland, and is producing many results apart from those with which it was immediately concerned. The revival of Irish industries, of Irish customs and music is following in its wake. Along with this it is raising the morals of the people and putting a new soul into the nation. The Ireland of to-day is very different in many respects from the Ireland of twenty years ago.

"Esperer-I Remember."

The following story, first published in T. P. O'Connor's Mainly About People, is going the rounds: Among the many teachers of French that the King had as a young man is numbered a French Count, who is still living. This centleman was really employed to put the finishing touches to the King's knowledge of French, which, as most readers know, is welf-nigh perfect. One day he referred to the use of the indicative after the verb esperer. This verb, as students will remember, is an exception to the rule that the subjunctive is employed in French after verbs expressing the feelings. The Prince—as he then was—at once exclaimed, "Yes, I must remember. That is a mistake I always make."
Many years after, another trait of the King's was brought out by an accidental meeting with the Count. I refer to his well-known good memory. The Count had heard that the King was to land at Marseilles, where he then happened to be. So he went down to the entry. Even amongst the crowd that had assembled the King picked out his old teacher and colled out to him: "Esperer, I remember." "Esperer-I Remember."

Long Range Prayer. The Swiss mountaineers have a cus-tom of calling through speaking trum-pets at dusk each evening, "Praise the Lord God!" This call may be started by one herdsman and is answered by others from neighboring peaks, the others from neighboring peaks, the sound being much prolonged as it reverberates from one mountain to an, other. After a short interval, supposedly devoted to prayer, a herdsman calls in the same manner, "Good night!" this, too, being repeated by his fellows. Then all retire to their huts. The impressiveness of these calls, echo-ing and re-echoing from rock and mountain to mountain, can easily be

The women who dislike men never give an entirely satisfactory reason therefore.

There's a story of a farm and his son driving a load to market. Of the team they were driving one was a steady, reliable old gray mare, the other a fractious, balky black horse. On the way the black horse was stalled and the black horse sulked and refused to pull. "What'll we do, father ?" said the younger man. "Well," said the father, "I guess we'll have to lay the gad on the old gray." That homely compliment to women: "The gray mare's the better horse" suggests how often when there's an extra strain to be borne it is laid, on the woman's back. How often she breaks down at last under the addid weight of some "last straw." Women who dragging along wearily through life can gain real strength by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It puts back in concentrated form the strength making material which working women use up more rapidly than it can be restored by Nature in the ordinary processes of neurishment and rest." Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are universal favorites with women, because they are easy to take and thoroughly effective in curing the consequences of constipation.

A man of much courtesy, modesty and reserve, he has devoted much of his spare time to municipal affairs, being known from first to last as a man of undoubted integrity.

Lieutenant-Colonel Seton Churchill of the British army recently told a good story at the London Missionary Society's meeting. In the first Poer war, he said, they were holding a religious service in the open and a Kafiir asked what all the noise was about. He was told that they were worshiping God because they wanted to go to heaven, which was a very nice place. The native then inquired, "Why, then then inquired, "Why, then the said annual heaven," does not England sames heaven?

An artist gives as a simple general rule for hanging pictures that where only one row is to be hung the central point in each picture should be on the level with the eye of the ordinary person. This point is easily discovered, for the eye unconsciously rests upon it at the first glance. In wignette portrait, for example, rests upon it at the first glance. Instead of erecting clubhouses and designing elaborate inclined wooden structures, as do our tologgan enthusiasts, as a general rule the Swiss sportsmen select an extended stretch of sloping ground, providing one or more particularly steep ascents here and there, and lay out a racing course by banking the snow on either side and pounding the floor of the track to boardlike hardness, Now all is ready, and warmly clad natives and tourists vie in sledding from end to end, against time.

Some sensational records have been made, as the sleds bound downward with tremendous velocity.

A favorite variation of coasting is "sled leaping." which consists of speeding to an key "take off," where the coaster pulls upward on his sled in its bounding flight and launches forward into a bed of loosely packed snow.
